ÍKORNI, a, m. a squirrel. This word is undoubtedly, as Grimm suggests (s. v. eichhorn), not of Teut. origin, but a popular corruption of the Gr. skai-oupos (= shade-tail), from which word all mod. European languages have borrowed the name of this animal; A. S. æcurn; early Dutch encoren; Dutch eekboren, eikboren, inkboren; O. H. G., mid. H. G., and Germ. eichborne, eichorn; Dan. ægern; Swed. ickorn, ekorre; in the Romance languages, old Fr. escuriere; Fr. ecureuil; Ital. sciriuolo; whence Engl. squirrel. The word ikorni occurs in the heathen poem Gm., but the word is outside the metre, spoiling the flow of the verse, and was no doubt added afterwards; therefore, instead of 'Rata-töskr heitir íkorni | er renna skal,' read 'Rata-töskr heitir | er renna skal.' Perhaps the ancient Scand. name of the animal was töskr, akin to Engl. tusk, A. S. tux, from its sharp teeth, and then Rati (= the climber?) would in the verse be the pr. name, töskr the appellative

Jarkna-steinn, m. [prob. a for. word derived from the A. S. eorcnan-stán]:—a gem, it occurs only in the following poems, Vkv. 23, 33, Gkv. 1. 18, 3. 9, which may all have been composed by one man, who borrowed the word from the A. S.

JARL, m., older form earl, [Hel. eri; A. S. eorl; Engl. earl]: this word had a double sense, one old and common to the Saxons as well as the earliest Scandinavians, one later and specifically Norse, which afterwards became English through the Norse and Danish invasion, and was finally established by the Norman Conquest.

A. A gentle, noble man, a warrior, and collect. gentlefolk, as opp. to the churl folk or common people (karlar, búendr); thus the old poem Rígs-mál distinguishes three classes, earls, churls, and thralls (jarla-mett, karla-mett, þralla-mett); so also in A. S. eorl and eorl are almost proverbially opposed; in the old Saxon poem Heliand, 'erl' is used about a hundred times = a man. Prof. Munch suggested that the name of the Teutonic people Eruli or Heruli simply represents an appellative (warriors), which the Roman writers took to be a proper name. In the Scand. countries this use of jarl is rare and obsolete, but remains in poet. phrases, in old laws, and in law phrases; oddar görva jarli megin, sprars make the earl's might, Mkv.; rudda ek sem jarlar forðum mér til landa, I won me lands like the earls of yore, Glúm. (in a verse); jarls yndi, an earl's delight = a man's delight, Hm. 96; jörllum öllum ódal batni, Gh. 21; hlaðit ér, earlar, eikikostinn, 20; Ítrar jarla-brúðir, 'earl's-brides,' ladies, Gkv. 1. 3; alsnotrir jarlar, the gentle earls, 2; eggja ek yör, jarlar, Am. 54; jarla einbani, 'earl-slayer' = ἀνδροκτόνος, Em., Hkm.; karl-fólk ok jarla, churl folk and earl folk, Sighvat; eitt mein smik hvern jarl, every earl (man) has his ill luck, Fb. ii. (in a verse): in the law, jarls jörð, an earl's estate, is opp. to konungs jörð, a king's estate, in the phrase, hálfan rann skal hann taka er hann kömr á jarls jörð, en þá allan ok fullan er hann kömr á konungs jörð, Grág. (Kb.) i. 192, for this is undoubtedly the bearing of this disputed passage; jarlmaðr is opp. to búkarl, Fms. vii. (in a verse); so also karlmaðr (q. v.) in its oldest sense is opp. to jarlmaðr, = churl-man and earl-man; hirð-jarl = hirðmaðr, Fms. xi. 302, v. l.; berg-jarl, poet. a 'crag-earl' = a giant, Edda (in a verse); bak-jarl, a 'back-earl,' an enemy in one's rear; of-jarl (q. v.), an 'over-earl,' an overbearing man.

B. A chief, as a title, specially Norse and Danish. The Landnáma, which is almost our only source for the political and personal history of Norway before king Harald Fairhair and the settlement of Iceland, records several chiefs of the 8th and 9th centuries who bore an earl's name as a family dignity; Ívarr Upplendinga-jarl (Upplönd, a Norse county), Asbjörn jarl Skerja-blesi, Eyvindr jarl, 317; Atli jarl Mjóvi af Gaulum (a Norse county), Þorkell Naumdale-jarl (earl in Naumdale, a Norse county), 281; Grjótgarðr jarl í Sölva (a county), 297; and as a family title, the famous Háleygja-jarlar (the earls of the Norse county Hálögaland, whose pedigree from Odín was drawn out in the old poem Háleygja-tal; Hákon jarl Grjótgarðsson, etc.): so also the Mæra-jarlar, the earls of Mæri (a Norse county), the foremost of whom was Ragnvaldr Mæra-jarl, the forefather of the earls of the Orkneys (Orkneyja-jarlar) and the earls of Rouen (Rúðu-jarlar = the dukes of Normandy).

II. along with the Danish and Norse invasion the name appears in England, Bjartmár jarl in Ireland, Landn.; Hunda-Steinnar, an earl in England, id.; see also the Saxon Chronicle passim, where the very name indicates a Danish or Norse connexion. It is very likely that many of the earls of the Landnáma were sovereign chiefs, differing from kings only in title, for in old poetry a king and an earl were addressed in the same way.

III. about the time of Harald Fairhair all the petty chiefs became liegemen under one king, the earl being in dignity nearest the king, answering to comes

In mid. Lat. and graf in Germ. In Scandinavia both name and office became extinct about the 13th century: in Iceland, being a common-wealth, it never took root; see however Gizur jarl (died A.D. 1268) in the Sturlunga.—For references see the Sagas passim, esp. Har. S. Harf. ch. 6.

S. even spelt hjártegn; jartegn (badly), Fms. xi. 38: that the syllable tein was sounded guttural is also shown by the rhyme, sláts eru jarteignir, Eb. JAUR, adv., also spelt jár, Skálda 163 (Thorodd), Art. 126: in mod. usage pronounced double, jur-jór or jár-jór (sounded yer-yor), which word was at the end of the last century still used in the north of Iceland (Thingeyjar-sýsla): [it is a compd particle, from já = yes and r, which may be a pers. pron., analogous to the early Germ. jā ich! jā dū! jā si! jā ir! Grimm's Gramm. iii. 765; other Teutonic languages have preserved this particle, although in a somewhat different sense, mid. H. G. jāra or jār-ia, jāra-jā]:—yes, yes! with emphasis, yes, in sooth, yes indeed, yes certainly, as a reply to an expression of doubt or denial. Of this interesting particle only six instances are found in old writers:—three in O. H. L., biskup leit útar í kirkjuna ok sá hvar Ólafir stóð ok mælti, nú er konungr út kominn, þeir sögu at hann var eigi út kominn.—Ansver, Jaur, sagði biskup, sá er sannr konungr, er nú er út kominn, 10; hvat er nú um félag þat er konunginn á með yðr? þeir drápu niðr höfði ok kváðusk ekki hans félag hafa.—Jaur, sagði hann, þér sögðusk víst vera hans félagar, 45; Maðr svarar, því mæltir þú þat?—Jaur, segir hann, þat var mér þá í hug, etc., 69; one in Thom. (the Norse Recension), ekki var ek þar nærri, ok því sá ek enga þessa hluti, ekki heyrða ek ok þat er þú segir í frá.—Jaur, segir hann, Guð þat veit, at ek em uruggr um þat at ek sá þik þar, 246; one in Valde. 126 (spelt jár); and lastly, one in Thorodd, austr, eirn, eir, júr, eyrir, vin, Skálda 163. Gudmund Andrae mentions this particle as in use in his time, and as sounded jör-jur, e. g. er ekki dagr?—ansver, jör-jur! viltu ekki þetta?—ansver, jör-jur! but his derivation from Lat. jure is erroneous.

JÓL, n. pl., in rhymes, gálg, jóla, Ó. H. (in a verse); [A. S. geol, sometimes used of the whole month of December, whereas December is also called æra geola = fore Yule, and January æftera geola = after Yule; the plur. in Icel. perhaps refers to this double month. The origin and etymology of the word Yule is much contested, and has been treated at length by Grimm (Gesch. der Deutschen Sprache), who tries to make out a relation between the Lat. Julus or Julius and the Teut. Yule, the one being a midsummer month, the other a midwinter month; like former etymologists, he also derives the word from hjóla, a wheel, as referring to the sun's wheeling round at midwinter and midsummer time. The resemblance of the words is striking, as also the old northern celebration of the midsummer feast Jónsvaka (see below), which was in fact a kind of midsummer Yule.]

B. Yule, a great feast in the heathen time, afterwards applied to Christmas (as still in North. E.). In Icel. popular usage Yule-eve is a kind of landmark by which the year is reckoned, so that a man is as many years old as he has passed Yule nights, hafa lifað (so and so) margar jóla-nætr; for the year counts from Yule night, whence the phrase, vera illa or vel á ár kominn, to become well or ill in the year; thus a person born shortly before Yule is 'illa á ár kominn,' for at next Yule he will be reckoned one year old, whereas one born just after it is 'vel á ár kominn.' The heathen Yule lasted thirteen days, whence are derived the names þrettándi, the thirteenth = Epiphany, i. e. the 6th of January, as also the Engl. 'Twelfth-night;' it is however probable that the heathen feast was held a little later than the Christian (see höku-nótt). The heathen Yule was a great merry-making, and tales of ghosts, ogres, and satyrs were attached to it, esp. the jóla-sveinar or 'Yule-lads,' a kind of goblins or monster satyrs, thirteen in number, one to each day of the feast, sons of the kidnapping hag Grýla (q. v.), whose names were used to frighten children with, see Ísl. þjóða. i. 219, 220. As the night lengthens and the day shortens, the ghosts gain strength, and reach their highest at Yule time, see Greit. ch. 34-37, 67-70, Eb. ch. 34, Flóam. S. ch. 22. The day next before Yule is called atfangadagr (q. v.) jóla, when stores were provided and fresh ale brewed, jóla-öl. Passages in the Sagas referring to Yule are numerous, e. g. Hervar. S. ch. 4, Hálfð. S. Svarta ch. 8, Har. S. Hárf. ch. 16 (in a verse), Hásk. S. Góða ch. 12, 15, 19, Ó. H. ch. 151, Eb. ch. 31, Landn. 3. ch. 15 (in the Hb.), Bjarn. 51 144, Sturl. iii. 127. As for Yule games play the Norse and Danish jule-buk, jola-gæit (Ivar Aasen) = a Yule goat, Dan. jule-læg = a Yule game.

JÓN, m. (Jónn, Fb.), a pr. name, contraction of the older dissyllabic Jóann, Jónn, Jobannes, see Íb. 17: of the same origin are Jóhanna, Jóhannes, Jens, which have come into use since the Reformation, whereas Jón or Jón appears in Icel. at the middle of the 11th century, and soon afterwards became so popular that in the K. Á. (of 1276) it is made to serve for M. M. (N. or M.) in the baptismal formula, as also in the law formula, yfir húði Jóni, against M. M., see Njála. Jónsbók, f. Jón's book, the code of laws of 1281, named after John the lawyer (legmaðr), who brought the book from Norway to Icel., Ann. 1281, Árna S.

II. St. John Baptist's Day (June 24) is in the northern countries a kind of midsummer Yule, and was in Norway and Sweden celebrated with bonfires, dances, and merriment; and tales of fairies and goblins of every kind are connected with St. John's eve in summer as well as with Yule-eve in winter. The name of the feast varies.—Jóns-dagr, m., Jóns-messa, u. f., Jónsvöku-dagr, m. the day, mass of St. John = the 24th of June; Jóns-nótt, f., Jóns-vaka, u. f., St. John's eve, 'John's-wake,' Rb. 530, Sturl. iii. 59, N. G. L. i. 340, 343, Fms. viii. 357, ix. 7: Jónsvöku-skeið, Fms. x. 49: Jónsvökuleyti, id. In Norway the feast is at present called Jónsoka = Jónsvaka, and the fires Jónsokubrísing (cp. the Brisinga-men of the Edda). The origin of this feast is no doubt heathen, being a worship of light and the sun, which has since been adapted to a Christian name and the Christian calendar. For the fairy tales connected with this feast, see Ísl. þjóða, which takes again call to mind Shakespeare's Midsummer Night's Dream: Jónsmessu-öl, n. ale brewed for St. John's day, N. G. L. i. 137: jó var sumar-tíð ok hátíð mikil Jónsvöku-nótt, Bær. 17.

3. Jóns-dagr, Jóns-messa are also used to signify the day or mass of the Icel. bishop John (died A. D. 1121), April 23 and March 3, see Bs.: Jónshöfuð, Jóns-akrípt, f. the head, tablet of St. John, B. K., Vm., etc.: Jóns-stúka, u. f. chapel of St. John, Sturl. i. 125.

K

K (ká) is the tenth letter of the alphabet; in the common Runes it was represented by ᚕ (kaun); the Anglo-Saxon k was called cæd or cæn = Germ. kien, a pine or fir-tree; but as this was not a Norse word, the Scandinavians represented it by the Norse word nearest in sound to it, kaun (a boil or scab), which bears witness of the Anglo-Saxon origin of the old Norse Runic poem.

B. PRONUNCIATION.—The k is sounded hard or aspirate, the pronunciation varying as that of g does, see p. 186; it is hard in kaldr, koma, kunna, aspirate in kel, kem, kenna, kið, kysa, kæti, keyri, vekja, etc.; the only difference is that k has the same sound, whether initial or medial, kaka, kikir, just as in English: in modern Danish the medial k has been softened into g, e.g. Icel. sök, vaka, líka, Engl. sake, wake, like, are in Danish sounded sag, vaage, lige, whereas Sweden and Norway as well as Iceland have kept the old pronunciation.

2. the letter k before t and s is sounded as g, thus okt and ogt, þykkt and þygt, slíks and slígs are sounded alike; and so k is now and then misplaced in MSS., e.g. lakt = lagt, heilakt = heilagt. The spelling and other points referring to k have already been treated under C, p. 93; for ka = kv see Gramm. p. xxxvi. (H. i. 8).

C. CHANGES.—The change of initial kn into bn has been mentioned in the introduction to letter H (B. H. 2. 7), where however 'hnefi' ought to be struck out of the list: for the changes of nk into kk see the introduction to letter N.

II. according to Grimm's law, the Teut. k answers to the Gr. and Lat. g; thus Lat. genus, gēna, gentis, Gr. gēnos = Icel. kyn, knó, kind, etc.; but in borrowed words no change has taken place, as in Keisari, kista, kerti, kjallari, = Lat. Cæsar, cista, cerra, cella; the words borrowed in that way are very numerous in this letter, but there are some slang or vulgar words, which seem not borrowed, and yet no change has taken place.

Kaðall, m., dat. kaðli, [prob. like Engl. cable, borrowed from mid. Lat. capulum, caplum; the word perhaps denotes twisted ropes, for in olden times the Scandinavians made their cables of walrus skin, svíðr]:—a cable, esp. as a naut. term, Fms. ii. 279, vii. 82, 283, Ó. H. 28, Fas. ii. 543, Gullþ. 8, passim.

Engl. cheaper, chaffer, couper, chop-man, etc. (see angr); Germ. kaufen; Dutch koopen; Swed. köpa; Dan. kjøbe; a word common to all Teut. languages. The derivation from Lat. caupona is hardly admissible, whereas Grimm's ingenious suggestion (Dict. iii. 198) connecting it with Goth. kaupatan, which Ulf. uses = to strike in the face, is strongly borne out by the very form of the Icel. word;—since, first, this word, although having au as its root vowel, follows the 2nd and not the 1st weak conjugation; secondly, the vowel changes in preterite and participle, which is characteristic of a verb with an inflexive or characteristic j; thirdly, the t in the preterite (so far as is known) is never spelt with d or þ,—keypti, not keyptði or keyptþi (see introduction to letter D, C. III. 2),—which indicates that the t is here radical and not inflexive. The Icel. word therefore represents in its tense both the Gothic words,—kaupan in the present tense, kaupatan in the preterite; the bargain was symbolized by 'striking,' hence the phrase 'to strike' a bargain, Dutch koopslagen.]

KVIÐR, m., gen. kviðar, pl. kviðir, acc. pl. kviðu, [Ulf. qiss = φῆμι, ἀοιῶ, as in ana-qiss = βλασφημία; þiupi-qiss and waita-qiss = εὐλογία; missa-qiss = σχίσμα, etc.]—prop. a saw, saying, speech, word, and hence in law a verdict given by neighbours; for the Engl. 'verdict' is indeed a kind of rendering of the Norse term; kviðr Norma, the word of the Norms, weird, fate, death, kveld lifir maðr ekki eptir kvið Norma, Hdm. 31; orði-kviðr, a saw, proverb; mis-kviðr, 'saying-amiss', false pleading. The old law makes a distinction between vætti (a witness) and kviðr (a verdict),—þar er bæði fylgir einni sök vætti ok kviðr, þá skal vætti fara fyrr fram en kviðr, Grág. i. 47; before delivering his opinion each neighbour had to take an oath,—þat er mælt, áðr kviðr sé borinn, at þeir skulu eiga vinna allir áðr at dómi, 53. The old records mention various kinds of neighbours and verdicts:

1. in Norse law, a. the heimis-kviðr (heims-kviðr, heimilis-k.) or a 'home-verdict', a verdict of neighbours, bearing some resemblance to the oath of compurgators; ten, or in lesser cases four or six, neighbours were to accompany the accused to the court, two of whom had to swear on the book, and the rest followed,—en þat er heims kviðr er tíu menn fylgja til móts, en sverja tveir menn á bók, en átta sanna þat, N. G. L. i. 311, cp. ii. 505; hafa með sér heimiliskviðar-vátta til þings, K. Á. 214; hann hafir heiman heimiliskviðar-vitni, 152; nema heimiliskviðar-vitni fylgi, Gpl. 193; þá skal með þessu heimiliskviðar-vitni sækja, N. G. L. i. 140 (heims-kviðar-vitni, 337); þá skal með þessu heimiliskviðar-vitni sækja, at einn skal bera en tveir sanna um þriggja ára mál, en um sex ára mál skal einn sanna en fjórir sverja, en þeir skulu vera fylkis-menn, N. G. L. i. 140, 316; en ef eigi kemr saga hins sára fram á fyrsta þingi né heimiliskviðar-vitni, þá . . . 160; similar were the 'sandemænd' (sooth-men) of the early Danish law; to this the old saw refers, hættir er heimis-kviðr, nema sér góðan geti, perilous is the home-verdict, unless one gets a good one, Sdm. 25.

β. in Icel., unless the bjargkviðr (q. v.) be identical to heimis-kviðr, this sort of verdict is seldom mentioned; eigi skal heimis-kviðr annan at henda, Grág. i. 361. 2. in Icel. law the tólfstar-kviðr (verdict of twelve), also called goða-kviðr (priest verdict), Grág. i. 168, viz. a body of twelve men, of whom eleven were to be summoned by the goði of the district, and he, being the twelfth of the number, had to deliver the final verdict. The verdict of twelve was only appointed for certain cases defined in the law, K. þ. K. 168, v. 1; nú hefir maðr tólfstar-kviðar kvatt, ok skal goði nefna þriðjunga-menn sína til kviðar þess með sér, ok er honum rótt hvárir þeir eru bændr eða gríð-menn, hann skal ellefu menn nefna aðra en sik, Grág. i. 57, see the whole chapter 17 in þ. þ., as also the Grág. passim; ella kveðja til tylptar-kviðar goða þess (þann?) er sóttir er . . . en ef sjálfir er sóttir goðinn þeirri sök, þá skal kveðja samþingis-göðann tölptar-kviðar; tölptar-kviðar skal kveðja þann göða er sá er í þingi er sóttir er, Grág. i. 138; er göði er kvæðr tölptar-kviðar um þat er hann á eigi at skilja, þá ..., 168, 207; nú koma menn til þings, ok málit í dóm, ok á Glúmr (in his capacity as göði) at bera tölptar-kvið, ... Glúmr berr af honum kviðinn ok únytti málit, Glúm. ch. 18; tölptar-kviðr átti um at skilja, en hvárrgi þeirra Snorra né Arnkels þótti bera mega kviðinn fyrir hleyta sakir við sakjanda ok varnar-áðilja, var þá Helgi Hólgarða-göði kvæðr tölptar-kviðar, ... eptir þat bar Helgi af kviðinn, Edb. ch. 16, cp. also the passage in Lv. ch. 4, where a verdict of twelve seems to be meant. β. but the common popular verdict was the búa-kviðr or neighbour-verdict, given by five, and in some cases by nine, neighbours (see búi), who had to be summoned either at home (kveðja búa heiman) or in certain exceptional instances in the court (á þingi); the instances in the Grág. and the Sagas, esp. the Nj., are almost endless: technical phrase, bera kvið, to give the verdict, Nj. 87, Grág. i. 57, passim; as also, bera af kviðinn, or, bera á kviðinn, to give a verdict for or against, (see bera B. 1); ryðja kviðr ok kviðu, prop. to 'clear the verdict,' i. e. to challenge the neighbours, Grág. i. 29; bjóða til rúðningar um kviðinn, Nj. 87, passim. γ. a special kind, egningar-kviðr, a kind of law quirk, Grág. i. 56; ironical, nú er getið um fyrir þorkatli at honum þykkja ríkt bornir kviðinnir, Lv. 27. From the analogy of the Icel. custom, it can be inferred with certainty that along with the invasion of the Danes and Norsemens, the judgment by verdict was also transplanted to English ground, for the settlers of England were kith and kin to those of Iceland, carrying with them the same laws and customs; lastly, after the Conquest it became the law of the land. This old Scandinavian institution gradually died out in the mother countries, and came to an end in Icel. A. D. 1271-1281, with the fall of the Commonwealth, and the introduction of a Norse code of laws, whereas it was naturalised in England, which came to be the classical land of trial by jury.

It seems that in the Saga time (10th century) the cat was not yet domesticated, for passages such as Vd. ch. 28, Eg. S. Einh. ch. 10, and the story in Edda (Thor lifting the giant's cat) apply better to the wild cat or the martin cat; and the saying in Ísl. ii. l. c. (see the cat the mouse?) probably refers to the weasel and the field mouse; but that early in the 12th century the cat was domesticated even in Ícel. is shewn by the story of the chess-players and the kittens leaping after a straw on the floor, told in Mork. 204, 205; for a curious legend of the genesis of the cat, see Maurer's Volks. 190; kattar sonr, a cat's son (the ermine cat), a bastard, was a term of abuse, Hkr. i. 18;—a nickname, Landn.; hvers son er tú?—Ek em Kattarson,—Hvert var sá kötttrinn? L

L (ell) is the eleventh letter of the alphabet, and the first of the liquids. In the Runic alphabet on the Golden horn, as well as in the later Runes, it was represented by ℒ, called lög, q. v. (lög er það er fellir ór fjalli, Runic poem; A. S. lagu), and was, as the form shews, evidently drawn from the Greek or Latin alphabet. In old MSS. a digraph ℒ is often used for ll, see Ba. i. 333 sqq.

B. The l is in Icel. sounded as in other Teut. languages; but ll, after a vowel and not combined with another consonant, had a peculiar sound, almost dlb, thus, gull, fall, hella, kalla, = gudhl, fadh, hedlha, kadhla. This pronunciation is still observed in Icel. as well as in some provincial dialects of western Norway, Vorse-vangen, Sogn, Hardanger; in some other parts of Norway it is sounded as dd. There are no means of ascertaining with certainty whether the ancients sounded ll exactly as the Icel. at present do, or whether it was not more aspirate than dental (as llb).

2. The peculiar aspirate sound of l before a radical dental is mentioned Gramm. p. xxxvi. (II): thus holt, allt, gult, illt, hallt, etc. were sounded (and are still sounded) as holht, alht, gulht, ilht, halht; as also in old writers before d, hold, kald, = holhd, kalhd, although in mod. pronunciation the aspirate sound is less perceived before a media than before a tenuis.

C. In some Icel. words the ll is due to assimilation, and answers to Goth. lþ, Saxon and Germ. ld, e. g. Icel. gull = Goth. gulþ, Engl. and Germ. gold; it is however likely that originally these words were distinct in sound from those which had a radical ll, and it may be that the present peculiar sound of ll was due to this cause—that the sound of the assimilated ll prevailed and became universal, whilst the original radical ll sound was lost; though even in the earliest rhymes no distinction is to be perceived.

2. In much later times dl assimilated into ll in a few words, brálá = brádlá; as also lr into ll in inflexions, hóll = hólr, stell = stels, Gramm. p. xvi. (I. 3. e): in still later times rl changed into ll, jarl, karl, varla, etc., which in mod. pronunciation is sounded as jall, kall, valla, etc.; but this is not observed in writing, although it is so in early print, as also in MSS. of the 15th century.

Q. All words having a radical initial b (bl) are to be sought for under H; see the introduction to that letter.

from the A. S. Liða, the name of a double month, June and July, (æra and æftera Liða); it remains in the Engl. Leet = the law court of the hundred]; — the Leet, a meeting which in the Icel. Commonwealth was held shortly after midsummer, fourteen nights after the dissolution of the Althing; the Leet was the third and last public meeting (Vár-þing, Alþingi, Leið); at the Leet the new laws and licences of the past Althing were published, as also the calendar of the current year, etc. At the time of the Grágás, 12th and 13th centuries, the Leet was held where the vár-þing or fjórðungs-þing used to be held, and lasted a day or two (tveggja nátt Leið, Nj. 168, Fs. 75), and was held in common by all the three goðar of the quarter (sam-leið). But in the Saga time (10th century) the Leets appear to have been a kind of county assemblies; this may be inferred from the records of the Sagas, as also from local names indicating small county 'Leets,' different from the sam-leið of the Grágás. For the Grágás, see esp. þingsk. þ. Kb. ch. 61 (p. 111 Ed. 1853). For the Sagas, Glúm. ch. 25, Lv. ch. 2; liðr nú á samarit, ríðr hann til Leiðar ok helgar hana, Band. 9, 10, þorst. LYRITR, m., or better lyritr or lyrittr, gen. lyritar (but lyrits, Grág. ii. 233), dat. lyritar, plur. lyritar, N. G. L. ii. 94, Jb. 193; the quantity cannot be ascertained because the vellums do not distinguish between long and short vowels; it is spelt with one t throughout the Grág. (Kb.); the alliterative phrase lagalyritr, as also the invariable spelling in the Grágás, shew that the word had no initial b. Former attempts at an etymology, from læ and rífta (Björn & Skarðráð), hlýr and réttr (Pál Vidal.), lygi and ríft (Fritzner), must be dismissed; the spelling lyritr, which once or twice occurs in Norse MSS. of the 14th century (N. G. L. i. 394, ii. 94, v. l. 19), is probably a mere corruption. LYRITR is a compd word from lög, law, and rör or reyr, a landmark, which word in the old Swed. law exactly answers to lyrit in the Norse law; lyrit is thus qs. lýr-ryr-ti, by assimilation and by weakening the y into i, lyritti; the t being inflexive: its literal sense, therefore, is a lawful rör or landmark. In Sweden there were often five mark-stones, but it is added (Schlyter iii. s. v. rör)—fjuri steinar oc þri steinar mæghu rör heta—four stones and even three stones may be called rör, i. e. make a 'law-rör', a lawful landmark, a lyrit; this, we believe, is the etymology of this much-contested word. About the gender (masc., not fem.) there can be no doubt, from the numerous instances in the Grágás; but in the 13th century the word began to become neuter, thus we have lyritit, Grág. (Kb.) i. 103, lines 14 and 21, but lyritinn several times in the same page: nom. lyriti in Grág. (Sb.) ii. 226; and efalaus lyriti, Nj. passim.

B. SENSE: I. prop. when the boundary of a field or estate was to be drawn, the law prescribed that a mark-stone (mark-steinn) should be raised on the spot, and three other stones laid beside it; these three stones were called landmark-stones (lyrit-steinar or lyritar); by their number and position they were distinguished from all other stones in the field, see N. G. L. ii. 94, cp. note 19 (Jb. 193).

II. metaph. in the Icel. law, a full title of possession, lawful claim to right or property; thus defined by Konrad Maurer—'Lyrit bedeutet in der Grágás und in den ältern Sagas das volle Eigentums-recht, oder auch den Bann, der dem Grundeigentümer zum Schutze seines Eigentums, dem Goden aber Kraft seiner Amtsgewalt zusteht.' 1. the earliest kind was probably the land-lynt or 'land-ban;' this law term was originally borrowed from the mark-stones themselves, and then came to mean a full title to land, field, pasture, or estate, Grág. ii. 224, 225:—eignar-lyritr, full lawful possession, a legal title of ownership; hafa eignar-lyrit fyrir landi, 204, 222. 2. a veit; Goði-lyritr, the veto of a Goði (Priest), forbidding the court or neighbours to deliver a sentence or verdict in a case, and thus quashing the suit. A Goði alone, by virtue of his office, was entitled to stop a court in this way, whether personally or by one of his liegemen, so that if any one else wished thus to stop a suit, he had first to go to his lieglord (Goði) and be authorised by him to do so; cp. the phrases, taka lyrit af Goða, selja lyrit, ef Goði færir lyrit sinn sjálf fram, and similar law phrases, Grág. i. 109–111, cp. esp. þ. þ. ch. 38; neglect of this was contempt of court, punishable by the lesser outlawry. The word lyritr occurs at every step in the Grágás, esp. in the phrase, verja lyriti, or verja e-t lyriti, to defend through a lyrit, i. e. to put under veto, to vindicate one's right, forbid, or the like; eigi varðar hagabæit, nema lyriti sé varið, Grág. ii. 224; verja lyriti haga, 225; þótt maðr veri fleirum lyriti (dat.), 226, Nj.; láta lyrit koma fyrir sök, to stop on a case, Grág. i. 109; kaupa land laga kaupir ok lyritar, to buy land by a lawful bargain and with full title of possession, ii. 213; eptir þat nefndi þorkell sér vátta, ok setti (varði?) þeim lyriti, ok fyrirbaud þeim at dæma, Lv. 31; ok er únytt stefna hans eðr lyriti (lyritr?), Grág. ii. 236; hann (the Goði) skal nefna sér vátta, áðr hann færi lyrit fram, i þat vætti, at ek ver lyriti, goða-lyriti, löglyriti fullum dómdendum at dæma um sök þá... enda skal hann svá verja kvíðmönnum lyriti, at bera kvíðu um hann, i. 111; ek ver lyrit minum, löglyriti dómdendum at dæma, id.; fara lyrit sinn fram, to utter one's veto, id.; fara með land-lyriti, ii. 225. compos: lyritar-eiðr, m. a 'lyrit-oath,' a kind of oath of compurgation in the Norse, but not in the old Icelandic law; it was an oath of three, viz. of the person who took the oath, with two compurgators, in remembrance of the three lyrit stones, which gave the name to this oath of compurgation; nú skal lyritar-eið svá vinna, sjálfir skal hann vinna, ok annarr jafnréttismaðr... sá skal enn þríðr, er..., N. G. L. i. 56, cp. Js. 30, Jb.; stendur lyritar-eiðr fyrir hvárt þriggja marka mál ok þau er minni eru, N. G. lög-madr, m. [old Swed. lagman; the president of the supreme court formerly held in Orkney was called the lagman]:—law-man. In the ancient Scandinavian kingdoms each legal community or state (lög) had its own laws, its own parliament (lögþing), and its own 'law-man' (lagmann, lögmaðr); the lagman was the first commoner and the spokesman of the people against the king and court at public assemblies or elsewhere; he was also the guardian of the law, and the president of the legislative body and of the law courts. As in the heathen time laws were not written, the lagman had to say what was the law of the land in any case of doubt; in the general assemblies, at least in Iceland, he had to 'say' the law (from memory) to the assembled people from the Law-hill (Lögbergi); hence in the Icelandic Commonwealth he was called lög-sögu-madr (q.v.), the 'law-speaker,' 'law-sayer,' 'speaker of the law,' and his office lög-saga or lög-sögn = 'law-speaking.' 1. Sweden and Gothland in olden times were the classical lands of lagmen, for the whole kingdom was a confederation of commonwealths, each with its parliament, law-speaker, and laws, who were all of them united under one king; see the various records in the old Swedish laws, Sveriges Gamla Lagar, as edited by Schlyter, as also the classical account given of lagman Thorgny in Ó. H. ch. 60 sqq.—Í hverri þessi deild landsins er sitt lögþing, ok sín lög, yfir hverjum lögum er lögmaðr, ... þat skulu lög vera sem hana réð upp at kveða; en ef konungr, eða jarl, eða byskupar fara yfir land ok eigu þing við búendr, þá svarar lögmaðr af hendi búenda. ... aðrir lögmenn allir skulu vera undir-menn þess lögmans er á Tiunda-landi er, Ó. H. 65.

2. in Norway the political institutions of the old patriarchal ages were greatly disturbed through the wars and conquest of Harald Fairhair; the ancient laws of Norway too have been preserved in a much more fragmentary state than those of Sweden; of some of the most interesting laws only the eccl. section has been preserved, often in Icelandic transcripts or abridged. The most interesting records of the lagmen are therefore not to be found in the Norse laws, but in the Sagas, e.g. the debates in the Hásk. S. Gamla, ch. 71–80, 85–97 (in the Flaty book), as also in the Þinga-páttir in Fms. vii. 123–150, and in stray passages in the Icelandic Sagas, in such phrases as lögmenn ok konungr, lögmenn ok dómenðr, lenda menn ok lögmenn ok alla alþýðu, Eg. 352.

3. in the later Middle Age in Norway, and in Icel. after 1280, the lagman was a justice, who presided in the court lögretta, at the lögþing (II), cp. Jb. passim.

4. in the Icelandic Commonwealth, the officer whose duties have been described above was specially called lög-sögu-madr, and lögmaðr is only used = lagmaðr = a lawyer.—þat er ok, at lög-sögu-madr skal svá görla þáttu alla upp segja, at engi viti einna miclogi gör, en ef honum vinsk eigi fróðleikr til þess, þá skal hann eiga stefnu við fimm lögmenn (lawyers, men skilled in law), en næstu dægr áðr, eðr fleiri, Grág. i. 2, 3; þat skal allt hafa er finnsk á skrá þeirri er Háfiði lét göra ... en þat eitt af annarra lögmanna fyrirsögn (of other lawyers) er eigi mæli því í gegn, 7; Njáll var lögmaðr svá mikill (so great a lawyer), at engi fannsk hans jafnfríngi, Nj. 30. At the union with Norway (A. D. 1272) the lög-sögu-madr of the Commonwealth was replaced by two lagmen of the Norse kind, so that in the Sagas composed after that date (e.g. the Grettla) or in Sagas preserved in later transcripts, the terms were now and then confounded, and 'lögmaðr' was, by way of anachronism, used of the lög-sögu-madr of the old Commonwealth, cp. Grett. 64, 115, 173, 191 new Ed., Nj. 24, 164, 237 (v. l.), Eg. 597, Ísl. (Gunn. S.) ii. 208, 238, 256, Bs. i. (Hugrtv.) 63, Fms. iv. 115, 176, where the Ó. H. edition has the true reading, being made from a verbum of the Commonwealth time.

β. two instances are recorded referring to the 10th century in Iceland, where a lögmaðr occurs as a kind of county sheriff or officer, viz. in the Háv. S. (begin.) and the Svarfdzla S. ch. 10; but both records seem to be spurious and adapted to the state of things in Norway, for neither Saga is preserved in its pure original state, but remoulded after the union; see Maurer's Entstehung des Isl. Staates, Beiträge, 136 sqq. In Scandinavia during the Middle Ages, as the power of the king increased, so that of the old lagman sank, and at last died away. In England it is preserved in the Speaker of the House of Commons, whose very name recalls to mind the law-speaker of the old Scandinavian communities.

M (emmu), the twelfth letter of the alphabet, was in the oldest Runic inscriptions (the Golden horn, the stone in Tune) figured , and in the later common Runes  and , whence later, the top being left open,  and ; all these forms being clearly derived from the old . Its ancient name was maðr (a man)—maðr er moldar-auki, in the Runic poem; but the likeness of  to a man with uplifted hands is merely accidental.

B. SPELLING, CHANGES.—The m is sounded as in English and other Teutonic languages: it is usually single in the words fim = five, um = umm, fram = framm, but erroneously, for it is sounded double, agreeably with the etymology. Changes: 1. peculiar to the Northern languages is the interchange of mn and fn when both letters are radical; thus, namn, nemna, = nafn, nefna; samn, samna, = safn, safna; jamn = jafn; sonna, sönn, = sofna, svefna; hemna = hefna; stamn = stafn; stomn = stofn; hramn = hrafn: the oldest Icelandic vellums frequently use the mn, in namn, samna, hramn, jamn, but more rarely in other instances, as omn, Blas 46; emni, Arna-Magn. 302. 3; somna, MS. 623. 34; sömnunum, O. H. L. 82, 83; sjömn, Pd. 14; it is still sounded instead of fn before d, as in hefnd, pronounced hemd, Hom. 7, 18; stemdi = stefndi: the fn has prevailed in the Icel., and is used in the Editions, as also in modern usage: on the other hand, the Swedish has throughout adopted the mn; thus, Swed. bamn = Icel. höfn, Engl. baven; Swed. lämma = Icel. lifna, Dan. levne; Swed. ämne = Icel. efni; each language has taken its course without regard to etymology, for in some of the words f is radical, in others m. 2. otherwise m and f seldom interchange, as in the threefold form of the particle of, um, umb; himinn, himneskr, and hifinn, hifneskr; nema (niss), cp. Goth. niba; hvilmt and hvilft, q. v.; as also Mal-kólfur = Mal-kolmr; þjálf and þjálm, skelmir and skelfir. II. in vellums m is dropped in the 1st pers. plur. of verbs before the pron. vér, vit, thus höfu vér, eigu vit, but in mod. usage eigum vit; hence comes the Norse form mér (plur.), mit (dual), by anastrophe of the v and substitution of the final m from the preceding verb: in öllu-megin, báðu-megin, etc., see megin. In old vellums the A. S. W is used to mark a double m, thus frammi = frammi; in most cases a medial or final m is marked by a stroke above the line. The Rune  is often used for the word maðr.

maðka, ad, to become maggoty, Stj. 91: maðkaðr, part. maggoty. MADKA, m, [Ulf. mada = madgaf; A. S. madu; O. H. G. mado; Germ. made; an augmented form, Engl. maggot, qs. madog; Dan. madike; Norse makk, Ivar Aasen; Scot. mauch]:—a maggot, grub, worm; dvergarnir höfðu kviknat sem maðkar í holdi Ýmis . . . ok voru þá maðkar, Edda 9; vall hann allr möðkum í hel, Rb. 414; mölu ok maðka, Fb. ii. 78; síðan hitti þorþjórn í maðka-sjó sem ligger nær Vinlandi, . . . ok maðkr sá smó neðan skipit til úsferu, A. (in a verse); gen. pl. mannna, dat. mönnum, acc. menn. In Ballads and Rímur after the 15th century, and hence in eec. writers of later times, a nom. mann is now and then used, esp. in compds influenced by Germ. and Engl., e. g. hreytti-mann, Skpa R. 58; or for the sake of rhyme, ætla þú ekki, aumur mann | af komast muni strafflaust hann, Pass. 14. 17: [Ulf. mannna = ánþarwos; in other Teut. languages spelt man, or better mann.]

B. A man = Lat. homo, Gr. ánþarwos, also people; eigi vil ek segja frá manninum þvitat mér er maðrinn skyldr, þat er frá manni at segja, at maðr er vel auðigr at sé, Nj. 51; mennskir maðr, a manlike man, a human being, opp. to giants or beings of superhuman strength, Gm. 31; menn eru hér komnir ef menn skal kalla, en líkari eru þeir þursum at vexti ok sýn en menniskum mönnum, Eg. 110; slýjum nú í ekki er við menn um at eiga, Nj. 97; þat hafa gamlir menn mælt, at þess manns mundi hefist verða ef hann félli á grífu, Eg. 107; þeir ungu menn (the young people) elskask sín í millum, Mar.; þótt nökkur væri þústr á með enum yngnum mönnum, Ld. 200; fjöldi manns, múgr manns, Fms. ii. 45, 234. xi. 245; þykkir mönnum nökkur várkunn til þess, 192; var

MAN, n., does not occur in plur. unless it be in gen. pl. mana, Stor. 13 (in MS.); [man is an ancient word only used in old laws and poetry, it remains in the compd man-sal, and in the Icel. local name Man-heimar; 'man' (ἀνδρῶν), being neuter and having but one n, is prob. of different origin from mann (ἀνδρῶν, ἀνὴρ), which is masc. and has a double final n. The etymology of this word is lost in the remotest antiquity; it appears in the O. H. G. mana-boubis = a bondman's bead, a 'serf's bead'; (Grimm in R. A. expresses a doubt as to the current etymology of Lat. man-cipium from manu-capere; perh. man and caput?). In early Swed. law the word occurs twice or thrice, næmpnæ man, næmpnæ quicæ, Schlyter i. 134; in Gutalagen—kauper tu mans man i garth thin (i. e. mans-mann = a bondman, cp. maus-manna and mans-madr, see Schlyter's Glossary).]

B. A bondman, prob. originally of prisoners of war who were sold as slaves (Irish in the west, Finns and Slaves in the east), see Ld. ch. 12, Ó. T. (Fms. i. ch. 92); svá ok ef hann vill í mani gjalda, tvá ára fyrir einn, ok á hann laun á maninu en næstu misseri ef hann hefir upp allt, Grág. i. 396; kaupna man ok gefa frelsi, N. G. L. i. 5, 6; ok þat fé skal hálftr vera í gulli ok í sífri en hálftr í mani hórænu (native bondmen) eigi eilra en fertogu, né yngra en fimmtán verra, 88; mans leiga, 224; ok heimta hann sem annan mans-mann, K. þ. K. 58; mani austrænu, eastern slaves, Hornklofi; máttkar meyjar at mani haðar, Gs. 1, 15; er þu man keyptir, 8; hálfá ádr alin fyrir frjáls-gjafa, penning veginn fyrir mann-manna, N. G. L. i. 347; næst kirkju-garði skal grafa mann-manna, 345; madr manna, no doubt false for man-manna, 388; er hann réttlauss við hann ok hans konu ok man hans allt, 36, Am. 66; þar kom mart man falt, þar sá Lóðinn konu nokkura er seld haðri verit mansli, Fms. i. 185; allt, mold ok man, N. G. L. iii. 92, v. l.

II. a girl, maid, as also in a worse sense, a mistress, for bondwomen often became their master's mistresses (see Ld. ch. 12), so that this sense grew out of the preceding one; líki leyfa ens ljósa mans, Hm. 91; í myrkzi skal við man spjalla, 81; et horska man, 101; et manunga man, 163; þat et unga man, þat et mjallhvíta man, Alm. 6, 7; bjartthaddad man, Skv. 1. 33; harðúðigt man, 27; sóstr-man, a bondwoman nurse, 3. 67; mans at kosta, Hbl. 16; hvé ek at andspilli komumk ens unga mans, Skm. 11; hve ek fyrir-banna manna glaum mani, manna nyt mani, þow I ban her from all concourse with men, 34; Yltinga man, Hkv. 2. 3; Yggjar man, the beloved of Ygg (Odin) = the Earth, Lex. Poët.; Hédins man = Hilda, the beloved of Hedin, Fms. ix. (in a verse); bjarnar man, a giantess, Stor. 13. It is probable that in some law phrases the obsolete 'man' has been replaced by the common 'mann', e. g. in gefa manni frelsi (mani? cp. manfrelsi), N. G. L. i. 5; as also in mana-kaup in the Swed. law, see Schlyter's introd. to the 10th vol. of Sver. Gamla Lagar. compds: man-frelsi, n. a granting of freedom to a bondman, manu-mission (as a vow), Orkn. 198, 200, Grág. i. 357, where it is wrongly spelt mannfrelsi. Man-heimar, m. pl. (thus pronounced on the spot, not Mann-heimar, as it is often spelt), the name of a farm in western Icel.; the local legend attributes the name to English captives kept there by lady Olóf, for having slain her husband, during the English trade (1467). But at that time the word man had become quite obsolete, and so the name must be older, prob. dating from the time of the first settler Geirmund, who had been a freebooter in the British waters before he came to Icel.; he may have had his household of bondmen at this farm, see Salm i. 353 (foot-note). man-kynni, n. pl.; góð m., luck in love affairs, Hbl. 31. man-manna, n. [early Swed. mans-man], a bondman, Grág. i. 271, Eg. 89, K. þ. K. 58.

man-söngur, m. a love song, Eg. 325, Bs. i. 165, Edda 16; esp. in the old law a kind of love libel, liable to outlawry, Grág. ii. 150, Fb. iii. 242; in mod. usage the lyrical introduction to the epic rhapsodies or ballads (rimur) is called mansöngur, for originally they were addressed to the poet's lady-love, Skáld H. 6. 1, Skíða R. 1, and in countless instances, e. g. Úlf. 1. 8, 2. 8, 3. 8, 4. 8, 5. 7, 9. 11, cp. 11. 10. mansöngs-drápa, u. f., -kvæði, n., -vísu, u. f. a love encomium, love song, love ditty, Eg. 5, Bs. i. 165, Fb. iii. 241, 242, Ölk. 36, Fs. 60, 87.

mar-mennill, m., thus Landn. 76, 77; mar-mendill, Fas. ii. 31

(thrice); in popular mod. usage in Icel., mar-bendill; the Hauksbók (Landn. l. c.) spells it margmelli; whence the mod. Norse marmale, Ivar Aasen:—prop. a 'sea-mannikin,' a kind of sea goblin or sea dwarf, in the Norse fairy tales. The marmennill is now and then hooked by fishermen; being a soothsayer, he tells them what is to happen. The classical passages in old Icel. writers are the Hálfis S. ch. 7 and the Landn. 2, ch. 5; for mod. times see Maurer's Volks. 31, 32, as also Isl. þjóðs. i.

131–134. Inseparable from these tales is the merman's 'laugblær'; he generally laughs thrice, e.g. the king kisses the queen, beats his dog, and stumbles over and curses the mound, at each of which the merman laughs; and being asked why, he says that he laughs at the king's foolishness, for the queen is false, but the dog is true and will save his life, and in the mound there is a hidden treasure; hence, þá hló marbendill, then the merman laughed, has in Icel. become proverbial of a sudden, unreasonable, and spiteful fit of laughter. The coincidence with the English legend of Merlin the 'wild man' in the romance of Merlin, (edited by the Early Engl. Text Soc. 1869, p. 434.) is very striking; and one is tempted to suggest that the name Merlin may have been borrowed from the Norse sea goblin (who in Norwegian tales is said to be the bastard of the sea monster háfstramb and a mermaid), and tacked on to the Welsh legend: even the word has a Norse or Teutonic sound: Merlin may well be shortened from the dimin. mer-mann-lin, mer-m'lin, merlin:

according to the Pref. to this Engl. romance the name is not found attached to the Welsh legend till the 12th century. comps: marmendillamið-garðr, m. [in Cumberland three farms, High-garth, Middle-garð, Low-garð], the 'mid-yard,' 'middle-town,' i. e. the earth, a mythol. word common to all ancient Teut. languages; thus Ulf. renders the Gr. akropolis by midjungarðs; Hel. calls the earth middil-garð; the A. S. homilies instead of earth say middan-garð (meddler, Jamieson), and use the word as an appellative; but the Icel. Edda alone has preserved the true mythical bearing of this old Teut. word.—The earth (Miðgarð), the abode of men, is seated in the middle of the universe, bordered by mountains and surrounded by the great sea (úthaf); on the other side of this sea is the Út-garð (out-yard), the abode of giants; the Miðgarð is defended by the 'yard' or 'burgh' Ás-garð (the burgh of the gods), lying in the middle (the heaven being conceived as rising above the earth). Thus the earth and mankind are represented as a stronghold besieged by the powers of evil from without, defended by the gods from above and from within; see Vsp. 4, Gm. 41, Edda 6, 25, 26, 35; mankind is said to abide 'undir Miðgarði,' under the Midgard, Hbl. 23; mest manna-val undir Miðgarði, Hbl. 11, 16, Fms. vi. 423 (in a verse); um allan Miðgarð, Blanda. In old Icel. translations of legends Leviathan is rendered by Miðgarðsormr, Niðr. 3, Post. 686 C. 2. The god Thor is called Miðgarðs-veórr, m. = the boly one of M., Vsp.; miðgarðs verjandi, the defender of Midgard, Edda 53; cp. þótt hefir varðan Miðgarð af þrek Edda (in a verse).

MINN, f., min, n., mitt, poss. pron.:—in the possessive pronouns minn, þinn, sinn (meus, tuus, suus), mod. usage pronounces i long (i) before one consonant, but short (i) before a double consonant, and accordingly all modern editions of old writers make a distinction in the root vowel, thus, minn, minnar, minni, minna, but mín, mínir, mínar, minum; whereas the ancients pronounced i throughout, as is seen from Thorod, who distinguishes between the short i in minna (memorare) and the long i in minna (meorare), Skálda 163; and still more clearly from rhymes, mitt and hútti, Bjarn. 63; minna (memum) and sína, Arnór (Orkn. 104); mitt, frítt, and mitt, sítt, Völs. MJÖLL, f., gen. mjallar, dat. mjöll, Rm. 26, Völa. Poët. II. a pr. name of a lady, Landn. mjalla-hvítr, adj. = mjallhvitr, white as drifted snow.

Mjölur, m., in the vellums spelt mjolinir, with o and ll (see Bugge in the foot-note to Vpm. 51); the ll seems to indicate that the n is radical, for if it were inflexive, it would be mjolinir (with one l); [therefore the derivation from mala or mola (to crush), though probable, is not certain; the word may be akin to Goth. milbma = cloud, Swed. moln, Dan. møl; cp. provinc. Norse molnas (Ivar Aasen) = to grow dark from bands of cloud arising]:—the name of Thor's hammer, Edda passim, Ls.

MJÖT, f., [Ulf. mitaps = μέτρον; O. H. G. mez; Germ. mass]:—a measurer; áum ek mála mjöt, I know the measure of words, how to make a speech, Höfuðl. 20; þess kann maðr mjöt, a man knows the measure of that, Bugge's Hm. 60 (see foot-note as to the reading in Cod. Reg.); mjotudr, from Vsp. the preceding poem, seems to have been in the transcriber's mind, and so he first wrote mjotvpc and then dotted the v, denoting that the last three letters were to be struck out. A fem. mjotud would, it is true, agree with the Goth. mitaps, but it does not suit the rhythm, in which a monosyllable is required.

mjotudr, m., spelt mjotviðr, Vsp. 2, which form can only be an error of the transcriber, for both passages, verses 2 and 47, represent the same word; [A. S. metoð; Hel. metod; by which word the A. S. homilies, as well as the Heliand, denote God, prop. the 'Meter,' Dispenser]; the word itself is of heathen origin: in the Ícel. it only occurs in old poets, and there in but a few passages, all of which agree, if rightly interpreted, with the A. S. use of the word. It occurs twice in the Vsp.; in verse 47.—Leika Mims synir, en mjötuðr kyndisk, but the meotud is kindled, lighted, where it seems to be applied to the god Heimdal, (the dawn in the Eastern sky, the morning star? see Prof. Bergmann in his Ed. of Gm. 1871, p. 169); in verse 2.—niú man ek heima, niú iðiðjur, mjötuð mæran fyrir mold neðan, I mind the nine abodes, the nine giantesses (the nine mothers of Heimdal?), the worthy Dispenser beneath earth; this 'meotud beneath earth' seems here to represent the god of the nether world, the Pluto of the Northern mythology, with whom all things above originated (Heimdal?); somewhat similar views are expressed in the Platonic Dialogue Axiochus, ch. 12 and 13.

2. sá er hann með mönnum mjötuðr, such a guardian (beler) is he among men, Fm. II. metaph. and in an evil sense, weird, bane; mjötuðr is glossed by bani (a bane), Edda (Gl.) ii. 494; mjötuðr Heimdals, the bane of Heimdal—the bead; Heimdalar höfuð heitir sverð... sverð heitir manns-mjötuðr, a sword is the bane of men, Edda 55, from a myth that Heimdal was pierced by a head (used as a bolt); nema mjötuðr spilti, unless death spoiled her, unless she died, Og. 14; ef mér meitr m. málrum gæfi, if death would give me more time for speech (says the dying Brynhild), Skv. 3. 71; sá manns mjötuðr, this bane of men, of a charmed, poisoned sword, Fas. i. (in a verse). The word is found only in the above passages; the explanation given in Lex. Poët. can hardly be the true one. For Hm. 60 see mjöt above.

MORÐ, n. [Ulf. maurþr = φίμος; A. S. morð and morðer; Engl. murder, murder; Germ. and Dan. mord; cp. Lat. mort-is];—a murder. Fær. 187; in ancient times murder (morð) and manslaughter (víg) are distinguished; if the killer, after the deed, had immediately, at the next or at least at the third house, confessed what he had done (lýsa víg, víg-lýsing, N. G. L. i. 61), the deed was manslaughter (víg), and the doer was liable to indictment according to the law, but the deed might, with the consent of the prosecutors and relations of the slain, be atoned by weregild. On the other hand, if the víg-lýsing either did not take place or was stealthily performed (Glúm, ch. 27), the deed was murder; and the killer was called morð-vargr, and was out of the pale of the law; en þat er morð ef maðr leynir eða hylr hræ ok gengr eigi í gegu, Grág. (Kb.) i. 154; drepa mann á morð, N. G. L. i. 158; hence the phrase to kill a man and then murder him, i. e. conceal the deed. In one instance the distinction is made threefold, viz. víg, laun-víg, and morð, i. e. laun-víg or secret manslaughter, if no víg-lýsing took place, but the perpetrator left the weapon in the wound or some other evidence that he was the culprit, en þat vóru kölluð launvíg en ekki morð, er menn létu vápn eptir í beninni standa, Gisl. 22. To slay a man asleep or feloniously was also called morð; so also to put a man to death during the night, nátt-víg eru morð-víg, Eg. 417; kallit er þat eigi morð-veik at drepa menn um nætr? Ó. In poets morð is used = slaughter, thus, morð-álfr, -bráðr, -hegg, etc. = warriors; morð-bál, -linnr, -róðull, -akr, etc. = weapons, Lex. So in Lat. phrases, in manu parentis, manumissio, etc., used of minors, slaves. In Norse the word is used in a special sense.]

B. In the ancient laws and customs matrimony was a bargain (brúð-kaup), hence the phrase to buy a wife, kaupa konu; the wooing was often performed by a deputy, and at the espousals (festar) a sum was agreed on, which the bridegroom was to pay for his bride. This sum was called mundr; and this transaction between the damsel's father or guardian and the other party was called mundar-mál or mund-mál, e. g. Nj. ch. 2, Mördur (the father) svarar, hugsað hefi ek kostinn, hón (i. e. my daughter, the damsel) skal hafa sextigi hundraða, ok skal aukask þrjújungu i þínum garði; hence the phrases, kaupa mey mundi, to buy a maid by mund; mey mundi keypt; gjalda mund, Skv. 1. 30, Fm. 41, N. G. L. i. 27, 48, Am. 93, and passim. No marriage was lawful without the payment of mund, for even if the wedding had been lawfully performed, without such previous payment of mund the sons of such a wedlock were illegitimate, and were called hornung (q. v.),—hann kallaði ykkur fríllu-sonu,—Hárekr sagði at þeir mundi vími til fú at móðir þeirra var mundi keypt, Eg. 40; the least amount of mund in Norway was twelve ounces, called the poor man's mund (öréiga mundr), N. G. L. i. 27, 54; in Iceland it was a mark, sá maðr er eigi arfgengr er móðir hans er eigi mundi keypt, mörk eða meira fé, Grág. (Kb.) i. 222. On the wedding night the stipulated mund became the wife's personal property, and thus bears some resemblance to the 'morning-gift' (morgun-gjöf) of the later legislation; þá er hjú koma i eina sæng, at þá er konu heimill mundr sinn ok svá vextir af fé því öllu er henni er mælt i mundar-málum, Grág. i. 370. The wife herself or her parents might, in case of divorce after misconduct, call on the husband to pay up the mund and the heiman-fylgja (q. v.) of which he had the charge, Grág. Festap. ch. 51; ella mun ek láta nefna mér vátta nú þegar, ok segja skilti við þik, ok mun ek láta föður minn heimta mund minn ok heiman-fylgiu, Gisl. 16 (p. 32 in Mr. Dasent's Gisl the Outlaw), cp. also Yngl. S. ch. 17; nefndi Mördur (the father) sér vátta, ok lýsti féskik á hendr Kúti (the husband) um fénað dóttur sinnar ok taldi níutigi hundraða fjár, lýsti hann til gjalda ok útgreiðslu, Nj. 15 and Dasent's Burnt Njal (l. c.), the Sagas passim, as also Grág., esp. the section Festap. ch. vii. sqq. The mundr therefore was different to the dowry (heiman-fylgja), and has nothing answering to it in the modern law, nor perhaps in the old Greek or Roman customs; hence Tacitus speaks of it as something strange, dotem non uxor marito, sed maritus uxori affert, Germ. ch. 18. On the other hand, the Teutonic rites of marriage call to mind the ancient patriarchal times as described in Gen. xxiv and xxix. The etymological connection between mundium = tutelage and the Norse word is not altogether clear. In modern Icelandic usage heiman-mundur is erroneously used instead of heiman-fylgja, q. v.

Múspelli, n. the name of an abode of fire; in the old mythology peopled by Múspells lýðir, the men of Muspell, a host of fiends, who are to appear at Ragnarok and destroy the world by fire; the prose in Edda 3 may have been derived from some lost verses of the Völuspá, for the name appears at the end of that poem (Vsp. 51) as if it were already known; it occurs nowhere else in the Norse mythical songs, except in Ls. 42 (múspells-megir). Múspells-heimr, the abode of Muspell, Edda 4. This interesting word was not confined to the Norse mythology, but appears twice in the old Saxon poem Heliand—mutspelli cumit on thiustra naht, also thiof ferit, comes in dusky night, as a thief fares, i. e. but the day of the Lord will come as a thief in the night, 2 Pet. iii. 10; and, mutspellis megin oþar man ferit, the main of m. fares over men, see Schmeller's Edition; a third instance is in an Old High German poem on the Last Day—dār ni mac denne mac andremo helfan vora demo muspille—there no man can help another against the muspell-doom. In these instances muspell therefore stands for the day of judgment, the last day, and answers to Ragnarok of the Northern mythology. The etymology is doubtful, for spell may be = the weird, doom, = Lat. Fatum; or it may be = spoil, destruction: the former part mut or muod is more difficult to explain. The Icel. mús is an assimilated form.

II. a pr. name, Landn., Nj.; from that Saga originated in popular usage, by way of metonymy, mörðr = a bachslider (as a 'Judas'). mardar-skin, n. a marten's skin; see mardarskin.

MÖRK, f., gen. sing. merkr, pl. merkr, [a word common to all Teut. languages]: — a mark, in weight equal to eight ounces or half a pound; twenty merkr make a fjörðung, q. v.; eighty merkr = a vatt; þat er lögpundari at átta fjörðungar eru í vatti, en tuttugu merkr skolu í fjörðungi vera, Grág. i. 499. 2. a mark, by weight or value, of gold and silver, eight ounces (átta aurar) go to a mark, 733. 16; mörk silfrs, mörk gulls, þrim mörkum gulls, Fms. vii. 233, Grág., Sagas passim; mörk vegins silfrs, O. H. L. 23; gullhringa ok stóð mörk hvár, Eg. 464; often used absol. so that the standard can only be seen from the context, verðr hann útlagr þeim mörkum, Grág. i. 16, 132; varðar honum þat sex merkr, tólf merkr, 319; varðar þat þriggja marka sekð, 499; hverju mikil fé er þetta? hann sagði hundráð marka, Nj. 4; Adalsteinn vill gefa skilling manni hverjum frjálðsbornum, en mörk sveitar-höfðingja hverjum, Eg. 280; hann skal gjalda hálfa mörk fyrir eyri, Grág. i. 208; þrjú hundráð hundráða eptir fongildu marka-tali, Dipl. v. 20; svá mikil ofa-fé at trautt kom marka-tali á, Fær. 11; hann var svá auðgr af gulli at engi vissi marka-tal, Fms. vi. 176; merkr-kaup, a purchase to the amount of a mörk, Gbl. 497; merkr-þjófr, a thief to the value of a mark, N. G. L. i. 326; merkr stykki, a piece amounting to a mark, H. E. ii. 188. As to the standard, the value of a mörk varied at different times and in different countries, see esp. Mr. Dasent's Essay in Burnt Njal. In Icel. the confusion was made still greater, by the fact that (as remarked s. v. eyrir) the word mörk was also used of the wadmal standard (the ell of wadmal), and so the law speaks of a mörk vadmála, Grág. i. 500; mörk sex... álma aura, etc., K. þ. K. 70, 172, but this is a contradiction in terms, for mörk is a weight, not a measure: the real meaning is often only to be made out by the context, e. g. in questions of wergild the weighed mark is no doubt meant.

S. ch. 12, 13; fóru þeir nú austr á markirnar, Fs. 100; austr um markir ok svá til Gautlands, Ó. H. 80; hann ruddi markir ok

II. the word is freq. in Northern names of places; Mörk is used of Finnmarken, Finn-mörk, Eg. ch. 14; þórláfr fór víða um Mörkina, Eg. 41; þórláfr fór þenna vetr enn um Mörkina ok átti kaupstefnu við Finna, 56; eru víða fjallbygðir upp á Mörkina, 58; Markir, f. pl. the Markland between Sweden and southern Norway, Fb. iii; whence Marka-menn, Marchmen, Fms. passim; cp. the Marsomanni of Tacitus, Die Mark in Germany. When the woodlands were cleared and turned into fields the name remained, thus in Danish mark means a field, open space: — in local names, Dan-mörk, Þörs-mörk, a woodland in southern Icel. sacred to Thor; a few farms in southern Icel. are called Mörk, Nj., Landn., different from Holt; in Norse counties, Heið-mörk, Þela-mörk, Vingul-mörk, Finn-mörk. marka-menn, m. pl. robbers, outlaws (cp. H. II. as a pr. name of a Finnish king, Fb. iii.

möttul-akaut, n. a mantle-skirt, Korm. 214 (as also the verse), Fms. vi. 243.

N

N (enn), the thirteenth letter, is in the old Runes represented on the Golden horn by the character 𐌺 , on the stone in Tune by 𐌺 , and in the later Runes by 𐌺 or 𐌺 , all derived from the Lat.-Gr. N ; it was called naud (need, A. S. nead), naud görir neppa kosti, Runic poem. In ancient MSS. the capital N or the A. S. H is used to mark a double n, thus, may, kenja, =mann, kenna.

PRONUNCIATION.—The n is sounded as in other Teut. languages; but nn after a diphthong has a peculiar sound like dab, thus steinn hreinn = steindh hreindh; whereas, after a single short vowel the sound is as usual, hann, mann; this nab sound does not seem to be ancient, as may be seen from rhymes such as, seinn þykki mér sunnan, Sighvat: a confusion between nn and nn first appears in MSS. of the 15th century; e. g. eirn hreim, = einn hreinn, and so in early print: before t the n is aspirate, vint = vinht, cp. introduction to letter L.

CHANGES.—The nn before r in olden times was often changed to and sounded as ð, not only in maðr, suðr (= manner, sunnr), öðrum, aðrir, aðrar (from annarr), miðr (= minnr), in which cases it is still sounded so; but also in saðr, muðr, brúðr, fiðr, meðr, uðr, guðr, kuðr, = sannr... kunnr; tveðr = tvennr, gryðri = grynri, Bs. i. 342, 349; saðr = sannr, Greg. 23, Liðn. 3: it is so used in rhymes by the poets; in all these latter instances the nn has reappeared in mod. usage; cp. Engl. month = munnr, but sunna (the sun). May not the change of the participles in -ðr into -inn (Gramm. p. xxiv, col. 2) be due to the same phonetic principle, but in inverted order? The n is elided in jamn-mikit, sounded and spelt jam-mikit; jam-góðr = jamn-góðr: — nn or n for nd, in sunz = sund, lanz = lands, munlaug = mundlaug; bundnir, sounded bunnir and spelt so, Edda i. 240. In some words the nn is due to assimilation, as that of zn in rann, Goth. razna; but often of np or nd in the cognate Teut. languages, thus Icel. nenna, Goth. nanþjan; finna, Engl. find. For the absorption of final and medial n see Gramm. p. xxx, col. 1.

For words with a radical b (bn) see under H.

-NA, a suff. demonstr. particle, see Gramm. p. xxxviii, col. 2 (III); esp. freq. in mod. usage in the words hér-na, þar-na, ha-na, nú-na, svá-na (proncd. svo-na or so-na), q. v., Band. 18; as also þér-na, Fms. vi. 422; þat-na, MS. 623, 19; þess-na, Fas. ii. 147; við-na, Fms. iii. 73; gær-na, vi. 254; with verbs rarely, var-na, Fas. ii. 174; part. spurt-na, Fb. i. 433; and lastly in the pers. pron. ha-on, hó-n.

This ancient 'nose-tax' was also imposed by the Norsemen on conquered countries, and the name gave rise to strange legends; thus, king Thorgisl, the Norse conqueror of Ireland (A. D. 830–845), is, by an Irish chronicler, said to have levied a tax of an ounce on each hearth, the penalty for defaulters being the loss of their nose. Prof. Munch, Norg. Hist. i. 440, has traced the origin of this legend to the simple fact that the king imposed a 'nose-tax' or poll-tax on the conquered Irish, just as Harold Fairhair afterwards did in Norway.

A. THE FORMS: this pronoun has undergone great changes. The earliest declension is the same as that of hverr, see Gramm. p. xxi; nekkverr, nekkver, Bs. i. 353, Greg. 13, 26, 33, Grág. ii. 205, 206, 304, Fms. x. 389, 393; gen. nekkvers, nekkverrar, passim; dat. nekkverjum, nekkverju, nekkverri, Greg. 16, 79, Eluc. 27, Bs. i. 352; acc. nekkvern, nekkverja, Grág. i. 41, ii. 251, 270, 313, Fms. x. 381, 390, 391, Greg. 15, Bs. i. 337, 344 (line 14), 352; nom. pl. masc. and fem. nekkverir, nekkverjar, Grág. ii. 205, Bs. i. 355; gen. nekkverra, Greg. 23, 28, and so on. The word then underwent further changes, a. by dropping the j; nekkveru, Grág. ii. 281; nekkverar, Fms. x. 381; nekkverum, 382; nekkvera, 393, 415. β. by change of the vowels; nakkvorr or nekkvorr, or even nakkvorr, nakkvat, see below; nakkvert, Bs. i. 342 (line 12); nakkvara, Ó. H. 116; nakkverrar (gen. fem. sing.), Bs. i. 393. γ. the a of nakk through the influence of the v was changed into ö (nökk), and then into o, and the final u into o, and in this way the word became a regular adjective, nökkvorr or nökkvorr, nökkvor, Mork. 57, Fms. x. 261; nökkvot, Bs. i. 393; nökkvöð, Mork. 62, Fms. x. 383, 391; nökkvors, passim; nökkvoru, Nj. 34, Fms. x. 393, 394; nökkvorum, 395; nökkvorrar, Edda i. 214; nökkvoru, 210; nökkvorir, Fms. vi. 5, x. 294. δ. the v dropped out; nökkorr, nökkurr, nökkorr, nökkorr, Vsp. 33 (Bugge), Greg. 9, Grág. (Kb.) i. 66, 75, 208, ii. 3, Mork. 168, Ó. H. 224, Grág. i. 1, ii. 366, Nj. 267, Fms. ix. 276, x. 135; nökköð, Hkv. 2. 5; nökkorr, Grág. i. 460; nökkorum, Skv. 3. 58 (Bugge), Grág. i. 45, 361, Fms. ix. 370, Nj. 7; nökkoru, Fms. i. 1, x. 420, Grág. ii. 129, Nj. 41, Eg. 394, Hkr. iii. 160; nökkorn, Fms. x. 409; nökkorn, xi. 6, Nj. 6, Mork. 205, Ld. 30; nökkorir, Mork. 205; nökkorir, Nj. 252, Fms. x. 388; see Gramm. p. xxi. ε. finally in mod. usage we have contracted forms before a vowel, thus nökkir, nökkurm, nökkur, except that the gen. pl. and gen. fem. sing. are still pronounced as trisyllables, nökkurrar, nökkurra; these contracted forms have erroneously crept into Editions from paper MSS. (as Vd. in the Fs.), where nökkir etc. should be restored to nökkurir etc. All the above forms occur confusedly even in very old MSS., and even the latest form nokkurr occurs in vellums as old as Cod. Reg. of the elder Edda, in the Mork., Greg., Grág. (Kb.) In addition to the above, there are mixed forms, nekkurr, 623. 41; nekkonar, Fms. x. 388; nekkers, Grág. (Kb.) 22; nokkurja, 623. 50; nakkor, B. K. 124; nokkverja, Fms. xi. 6; naucverjar, naucveriom, Mork. 62, 64, 65.

NÍÐL, n. [O. H. G. nibul; Germ. nebel; Lat. nebula; Gr. νεφέλη]:—a mist, fog: this ancient word is obsolete in the Northern languages, and solely remains in compounds, chiefly mythol.: nifl-farinn, part. gone towards the dark, i. e. the dead, a Ær. ley., Akv. 33. nifl-góðr, adj. a Ær. ley. in a doubtful passage, Stor. 15. Nifl-hel, f. the Tartarus of the heathen mythology, deeper down than Hel (Hades); wicked men are said to die a second death and pass from Hel into Niflhel; fyrir Niflhel neðan, hinnig deyja or Helju halir, Vpm. 43; riða norðr til Niflheljar, Vtkv. 2; vándir menn fara til Heljar ok þaðan í Niflhel, Edda; ok sendi hann (the giant) niðr undir Niflhel, 27.

Nifl-heimr, m. Hades, Edda 18.—Hel kastaði hann í Niflheim ok gaf henni vald yfir niu heimum, Edda 4; fyrr var þat mörgum öldum en fjörð var sköpuð, er Niflheimr var görr, 3. nifl-vögr, m. pl. the foggy way, Gg. 13.

Niflungar, n. pl. the Nibelungen, of the Germ. tales; the older form hniflungar (q. v.) shews that the word cannot be derived from nifl; the derivation in Edda 104, 105 (from king Nefir) is fanciful, and a later invention; hodd Niflunga (hniflunga?) = Nibelungen bori, Akv.; Niflunga skattr, id.; Niflunga arfr, id., Bm.

Nikuðr, Nikuða, Nikarr, m. one of the names of Óðin, Gm., Edda (Gl.); but, as suggested by Finn Magnusson in Lex. Mythol. s. v., it no doubt was originally the name of Neptune or a water-goblin, cp. Nykr.

NÍÐ, n. [Ulf. neip = φθίω; A. S. nīð; O. H. G. nīd; Germ. neid; Dan.-Swed. nīd]:—contumely, Vsp. 56; segja e-m nið, Akv. 35. 2. particularly as a law term, a libel, liable to outlawry:—of a libel in verse, yrkja, kveða nið um e-n, Nj. 70; ef maðr kveðr nið um mann at lögbergi ok varðar skóggang, Grág. (Kb.) ii. 184: the classical passages in the Sagas are Hkr. Ó. T. ch. 36, cp. Jónsv. S. ch. 13 (Fms. xi. 42, 43), Kristni S. ch. 4, Nj. ch. 45, Bjarn. 33 (the verse). Another and even graver kind of nið was the carving a person's likeness (tré-nið) in an obscene position on an upraised post or pole (nið-stöng), for an instance of which see Bjarn. 33; ef maðr görir nið um annan ok varðar þat fjörbaugs-garð, en þat er nið ef maðr skerr trénið manni eðr riðr eða reisir manni niðstöng, Grág. i. 147; when the post was set up, a horse's head was also put up, and a man's head was carved on the pole's end, with dire Runes and imprecations; all this is described in a lively manner in Eg. ch. 60 and Vd. ch. 34, Landn. 4. ch. 4, Rd. ch. 25. The beina-kerlinga-vísur of mod. times are no doubt a remnant of the old niðstöng;—certain stone pyramids (varða) along mountain-roads are furnished with sheeps' legs or horses' heads, and are called beina-kerling (bone carline); one of the most noted is on the Kaldadal, as one passes from the north to the south of Iceland, it is even marked in the map; a passing traveller alights and scratches a ditty called beina-kerlinga-vísa (often of a scurrilous or even loose kind) on one of the bones, addressing it to the person who may next pass by; for a specimen see Bjarni 193, as also in poems of Jón Þorláksson, for there hardly was a poet who did not indulge in these poetical licences. In popular legends the devil always scratches his writing on a blighted horse's bone.

From the words—eða þat er Grænlandingar kalla norðrljós, Sks. 74—it appears that the Icel. settlers of Greenland were the first who gave a name to this phenomenon; the author of the Sks. also describes the northern lights as they appeared in Greenland. norðr-lopt, n. the 'north-lift,' north, polar heavens. Norðr-sæta, u. f., or Norðr-sætr, n. the Northern Seat, name of a fishing-place in the north of Greenland, A. Noregr, m., gen. Noregrs; a later Noregr also occurs in Laur. S.; [mod. Norse Norge, sounded Norre]:—Norway, passim; that the word was sounded Noregr with a long vowel is seen from rhymes in Vellekla (10th century), Noregr, fóru; as also Noregrs, stórum, Sighvat (in a poem of 1038 A. D.); the full form Norð-vegr (with ð and u) never occurs in vernacular writers, but only in the Latinised form, Norðvegja, which was used by foreign writers (North Germans and Saxons); even the v (Nor-vegr) is hardly found in good vellums, and is never sounded. The etymology of the latter part = vegr is subject to no doubt, and the former part nór is prob. from norðr, qs. the north way; yet another derivation, from nór = a sea-loch, is possible, and is supported by the pronunciation and by the shape of the country, a strip of land between sea and mountains, with many winding fjords. The popular but false etymology of the ancients is from a king Nár (Orkn. ch. 12), as Rome from Romulus:—Noregrs-húfðingi, -konungur, -menn, -ríki, -veldi, the ruler, king, men, kingdom of Norway, Grág. ii. 401, Fms. vii. 293, Bs. i. 720, Sturl. ii. 55, Nj. 8, Isl. ii. 234, passim.

NÓTT, f., gen. nætr, pl. nætr; the old writers mostly spell this word thus (not nátt), agreeably with its mod. sound and form; this, however, is not a real ó, but a remains of the old umlaut ó (nótt); nom. nótt, Sdm. 26, Hkv. i. 2, Vpm. 24, 25, Gkv. 2. 12, Skm. 42, Alm. 39, 30, Sks. 50 new Ed.: acc. nótt, Hm. 112; miðja nótt, Grág. O—O

O, the fourteenth letter, is in the oldest Runes, on the stone in Tune, and on the Golden horn figured by , which was evidently taken from the Greek Ω; the later common Runic alphabet in earlier monuments has no o, but uses u or au instead, e.g. on the Jellinge stone in Denmark. Afterwards the Rune , or , appears under the name of oss in the Runic poems—oss er flestra ferða (= fjarða) = all firðs have an oss (month). The form was evidently taken from the A. S. Runic þ, which stands for α, and in A. S. is called ð, which answers, not to Norse oss (osium), but to áss (= ans, i.e. the heathen gods); but the Norsemen or Danes in borrowing the Rune seem to have misinterpreted its name or mistranslated it from ignorance of the phonetic laws existing between the A. S. and the Norse. The þ in Scandinavian Runic inscriptions is therefore a mark of later date (11th or 12th century).

B. PRONUNCIATION.—The o is either short (o) or long (ō); the former (o) is sounded like Engl. o in cod, the latter (ō) as in Engl. no, note; but the rules given at the beginning of the introduction to letter A (p. 1) apply equally to this letter, bōð being sounded bawth, but krōss in North. E. cross.

C. CHANGES.—In most of the oldest vellums o instead of u is used throughout in inflexions, -o, -or, -om, -on, -od, -of, -osk, -oll, -onn, instead of -u, -ur, -um, -un, -unn (Gramm. p. xxxv, col. 1, A); afterwards both forms are used indiscriminately, till in the 15th century the u prevailed, and has kept its place ever since; whether there was a difference in sound, and what, we are unable to state.

2. so also in a few root words, gōð, goll, fogl, oxi, skolu, monu, hogr, togr, monr (Dan. mon), smogoll, = guð, gull, fugl, uxi, skulu, munu, hugr, tigr, munr, smugull; on the other hand, is sour (a son), but sunr the older form.

3. a and o or u interchange in the inflexions, fagnaðr, fognaðr, fögnuðr; kallan, kollon, köllun.

4. u has changed into ö in the prefixed negative, ö-vitr for ú-vitr (unwise).

5. jú into jó, njóta, originally njóta; ljós, Swed. ljús: forms like mjúkr for mjukr, dókr for dukr may also be found in vellums, but are very rare.

II. ä, the vowel-change of á (see p. 1), is frequently spelt o (tor, nott, = tär, nött), but was in sound different from ö proper, and has since disappeared from the language, although remains of this 'umlaut' still exist in nött, öl, spönn (= nött, öl, spönn), but this o is sounded exactly like common o. So also o and ö are confounded in MSS., bornom = börnom = börnum. For the absorption of consonants see Gramm. p. xxx, col. 1, and the words themselves.

OF. Owing to the inability of the Scandinavian languages to sound v (w) before a vowel of the u class, several root words, which in dictionaries of the cognate languages (Germ., Engl.) begin with v, are in the Icelandic to be found under o, as okr, ord, orka, ormr, Öðinn, óðr, ósk, ómr; as also j, in ok (jugum), ostr, and ok the conjunction.

odd-hagr, adj. skilled in wood-carving, Bs. i. 143. Fas. i. 292.

odd-hending, f. a metrical term, when the first rhyming syllable stands at the head of a verse; thus in haf-löður stefir the syllable 'haf' is an oddhending, Edda (Ht.) 121: in mod. usage, in Ballads (Rímur), it means two rhyming syllables in the first, and one in the second line, three being an odd number of rhyme syllables—thus, sveipadr mund | á silki hrund | sat eg undir kvendi is an oddhending.

odd-hendr, adj. written in the metre oddhending, Edda 139.

Grág. ii. 13; ætla ek at sækja oddi ok eggju frændleifð mína, Ó. OF, prep. with dat. and acc., the form varies; umb is an obsolete and rare form, hence um, sounded umm, which is far the most common form in old writers, and has altogether superseded both umb and of. (the 'of' answers nearest to Ulf. uf; O. H. G. oba; Germ. ob; Gr. ὀ; Lat. sub; Sansk. upa.) Most of the oldest vellums, as also the poets, prefer to use 'of', yet not all, for the Cod. Reg. of Sæm. Edda in nine cases out of ten writes um, so also did the Cod. Acad. primus (the Kringla) of the Hkr.; and this is important, for these two vellums are our chief sources for old poetry; on the other hand, the Cod. Reg. of the Sæm. Edda prefers 'of'. Among other vellums the old fragment of the Orkn. S. (Arna-Magna. No. 325) mostly uses 'of', as of nóttina, Orkn. 110; of hans daga, 178; of jól, 180; of daga þeirra bræðra, 182; but also 'um', e.g. ofan um sik, ofan um hann, id. The word will be given in full under letter U, so that a few references may suffice here:

1. in the sense over, Lat. super, with dat. and acc., a, jörð græf of ágætum barma, Eg. (in a verse); brann of fylki, Yt., of svirum, Hornkláf. dik flæði of líkum, Fms. xi. 191; sjár þýtr of árum, vi. (in a verse). of þý breidum, Lex. Poët. β. with acc., of nýt regin, Vpm. 13; of dróttmugu, 11; of líðu, Sdm. 9; of sumar, Vsp. 40; of gærd rísa, Gs.; of lopt ok lög, Hkv.; úlfir gengr of ynglings börn, Eg. (in a verse); vestr fór ek of ver, Höfuðl. 1; liggja of ungan Mörukara, Fms. vi. (in a verse).

II. in a causal sense = Lat. ob; of sanna sök, for a just sake, justly, Fms. ii. 322 (in a verse); of minna, for a less cause, Glum. (in a verse); of litta sök, Lex. Poët.; of tannar deildir, id.; of minni sorgi, Korm. (in a verse).

OF and um, an enclitic particle, chiefly placed before verbs or participles, seldom before nouns; it is obsolete, and occurs only in old poetry and now and then in the oldest prose; the spelling varies, for here too the Cod. Reg. of Sæm. Edda, as also the Kringla, mostly prefer um, so as to take examples from the poem Hm., um skodask, um skygnask, 1; um getr, 8; um á (ours), 9; þýsk hann um, um getr, 17; um farit, 18; sins um máls, 21; um gelr, 29; um þörf, 35; um getr, 58, 65; um dvelr, 59; um víðr, 74; um lagit, 84; um vakin, 100; um komin, um sofin, 101; um kominn, 104; um gaf, 105; um geta, 123; um heilli, 129; um reist, 145; um stendr, 154; um koma, 163; of gat, 140; of alinn, 72; of kom, 145; of vitaðr, 100; of blíðr, 145; vf, vf boðit, 67; vf heimtir, 14: thus in this single poem 'um' occurs about twenty-four times, 'of' fifteen times, and 'vf' twice: for the other poems see Bugge's Edition: on the other hand, of traddi, Gh. 2; of þrumir, Gm. 8; of hyggi, 34; at ek öllum öl yðr of heita, Hým. 3; of geta, 4; of teknir, 14; of heitt, 32:—in prose, of maðr má egi of koma, Grág. ii. 209; of fórlar, Kb. 14; of telrat, 178; er hédan ok sér, Ísl. (Heidarr. S.) ii. 387; en ér of söt eigi ljós, but you see not the light, 645. 81; at eigi of sá á miðli, Íb. 11; má of rannsaka, 677. 6; þó at báðum of göri, 2; ok af því of eykr eigi atkvæði, Skálda (Thurrodd) 165; sem menn of bera megu, Hom. (St.); at hann megi jafnast of vera, id., and passim in that old vellum, see Fritzner's Dict. s. v.; ef þri um náir, Grág. (Kb.) 209; ef þeir um sitja, 74; um ves, 76; um tala, 89; um gora (twice), 109; um telrat, 194; um býðr, 230; um komi, 234; ef sól um szi, if the sun was to be seen, ch. 29.

II. seldom before nouns; sins um máls, Hm. (see above); um þörf, 38; at hann of dólg, Skv.; Baldur of barni, Haustl.; öll of rök, Alm. 9; of skópt, kinsamen, Edda (Gl.), Lex. Poët.; of tregi, Gkv. 1. 3 (thus Bugge in two words); þórs of rúni, Haustl.; of kögi, an oppressor, Fms. vii. (in a verse); with adjectives, of reidr, Skm.: it remains in some old sayings or phrases, án er illt um gengi; um seinan, Rj. 91.

of-öltilla, adv. = ofelmtilla (?), Sturl. iii. 185 C. OK, copulative conj.; the mod. form is og, which appears in the 15th century MSS., but the word is usually in the MSS. written thus 7.

The Runic inscriptions mostly have auk, which diphthongal form has in the conj. been changed into ok, but is retained in the adverbial auk = tham. As neither the stone in Tune nor the Golden horn happens to have the word, we are in the dark as to its earliest Scandinavian form. The particle ok is characteristic of the Scandinavian languages, as distinguished from the Germ. und, Engl. and; although this is more apparent than real, for the identity of ok with the Goth. copulative particle jaþ and ab, Hel. jaþ, has been conclusively demonstrated by Grimm, who also makes out an identity between Goth. ab, standing for bu, and Gr. καί, Lat. -que; the metathesis of ab for bu is analogous to Lat. ac = Gr. καί. Grimm farther supports this etymology by comparing the Teutonic compounds ne-hu, Icel. contr. né, with Lat. ne-e = ne-que, which proves the identity of both the suffixed particles, the Lat. e or que and the Teut. ab. The Goth. jaþ is a compound = ja-ab = 'inmo-que'; the Norse ok, too, is prob. a compound particle, the j being dropped, and then ja-ab contracted into aub = auþ; the final guttural b (sounded as x), instead of being absorbed by the preceding vowel, was hardened into the tenuis k. The negative verbal suffix -a and -að, the nominal suffix -gi, and the copula ok will thus all be derived from one root,—one of the many instances of the Protean transformations of particles, even the negative and positive being interwoven into the same word.

A. And, a copula between two or more nouns; í upphafi skapaði Guð himin ok jörð, Edda (pref., Gen. i. 1); ríki ok konungdóm, Fms. i. 23; mikill ok sterkr, Nj. 2; væn kona ok kurteis ok vel at sér, 1; dætr þrjár ok sonu þrjár, 30. If the nouns are many the usage may vary:—the nouns may be paired off, eldr ok vatn, járn ok málmr, Edda 36; or the copula is only put to the last, eldr, vatn, járn ok málmr; or, if emphatic, it may be reiterated, eldr ok vatn ok járn ok málmr; or ok may be left out altogether, málmr, steinar, jörðin, víðirnir, sóttirnir, dýrin, fuglarnir, eitrosmar, Edda l. c.

5. the particle ok connects together the parts of the sentence; þá mælti Frigg, ok spurði, then spoke Frigg, and asked, Edda 37; at þú þættir ráð þitt, ok bæðir þér konu, thou shouldst mend thy condition, and take thee a wife, Nj. 2:—it is used to mark the progress of a speech or sentence, féllusk Ásum orðtök ok svá hendr, ok á hvert til annars, ok vóru allir með einum hug til þess er unnit hafði verkit; Loki tók Mistiltein, ok sleit upp, ok gekk til þings...; Höðr tók Mistiltein, ok skaut at Baldri; Æsir tóku lík Baldri, ok flutta til sjávar, Edda 37; sendu þeir Ívar til hans, ok skyldi hann vita, Fms. x. 17.

II. in the old law (the Grág.) the apodosis or conclusion is headed by ok, then, as in the standing phrase, ok verðr hann útlagr, ok varðar þat... marka útlegr, and he shall pay, i. e. then he shall...; þeir menn er sakir eigu, ok skulu þeir ganga til dóms... and so in every page of the Grágás.

III. in some ancient epic poems the ok is as an historical particle put at the head of sentences or verses in a manner which closely resembles the use of the Hebrew v; the old Yt is in this respect remarkable,—ok sikling, 1; ok salbjarr, 2; ok á brann, 3; ok Visburn, ok allvald, 4; ok landherr, 5; ok ek þess opt fregit hafðak, 6; ok allvald, 7; ok þat orð, 8; ok hnakkmar, 10; ok varð hinn, 11; ok Hagbarðs, 12; ok þrálfir... ok sveiðus, 13; ok lofsall, 14; ok Austmarr, ok við aur, ok dæðgjarn, 16; ok ljúshómum, 18; ok ofveg, ok á frömuðr, 19; ok Ingjald, ok sjá urðr, 20; ok Skæreid, 22; ok nú liggir, 23; ok launsigr, ok buðlung, 24; ok um ráð, ok launsigr, 25; ok niðkrvisl, 26;—so used about thirty times in this single poem; in other poems less freq., but yet it occurs, e. g. in the fragments of Vellekla, see also the references given s. v. auk (III).

IV. the placing the copula before both the parts to be joined is curious; this only occurs in a few instances in old poetry; ok einnar átta, 'and' one eight, i. e. one plus eight = nine, Hd. (composed about 986 A.D.); ok hávar ham-ljót, 'and hoary scraggy' = hoary and scraggy, Haustl.; ok Sörli þeir Hamðir, 'and Sörli Hamðir' = S. and H., Bragi; ok átta enni-tungl fjögur höfuð, 'and eight eyes four heads,' i. e. four heads and eight eyes, id.; ok hörga blóthús, Rekst.; ok svá jarlar Óláfar, = jarlar ok svá Óláfar, Sighvat; ok hringa hlínar óþurft mína, the woe of her and myself, Kormak; ok há grasi víði = há grasi ok víði, Gm. 17; ok Elfar Gandvíkr miðli, Edda (Ht.) 1.

V. used as an interjection; þú skalt fara í Kirkjubæ—Ok, hvat skal ek þangat? Nj. 74; ok skaltú enn þora at mæla jöfnum orðum við mik, 656 B. 10: akin to this is the mod. usage in exclamations, wrath, wonder, indignation, og, hvað er nú að tarna! og, hvernig ætli þú látir! og, ekki nema það!

VI. the following are prob. ellipt.; segðu mér þat..., ok ek vilja vita, tell thou me that, and I wish to know = that which I want to know, Skm. 3; ættlar jarl at höggva þessa menn alla, ok þeir höfðu nú höndum á komit, all those, and (whom) they had got bold of, Fms. xi. 14.

Ó

Ó- or ú-, the negative prefix before nouns and verbs, [Goth., Engl., and Germ. un-; Dan. and Swed. ú-, the nasal being absorbed. The Icel. at a very early date changed this ú into ó, for the very oldest and best vellums use ó, not only the Greg., Eluc., Íb., the Miracle-book (Íb. i. 333 sqq.), but also the Grág., the Cod. Reg. of the Szm. Edda, etc.; in later vellums of the better kind ú and ó are used promiscuously; till about the union with Norway the ú prevailed, and is chiefly used in vellums of the 14th century; but in the 15th the ó again took its old place, and has been retained ever since, agreeably with the usual pronunciation. The ó is therefore the proper Icel. form, e. g. ó-vitr = Engl. unwise; that it was sounded thus even in the 13th century is also shewn by the treatise of the second grammarian (Gramm. p. i, col. 1).—ó eðr ú þat skiptir orðum, svá sem er satt eðr ó-satt (ú-satt), Skálda 171. This change of spelling in the MSS. about (or a little before) the union with Norway cannot have been owing to any change in pronunciation, but was simply a Norwegianism, as were many other cases, e. g. the dropping the b before liquids, contrary to the Icel. pronunciation. On the other hand, as for the rest of Scandinavia, the ú has been retained in Denmark and in the east of Norway; but ó in the west and north of Norway (see Ivar Aasen's Dict.), as also in mod. Swed. (e. g. o-möjlig = Germ. unmöglich). In early Swed. (in the laws) u and o are used indifferently. The Orkneys seem to have followed the Icel., to judge from a rhyme in the poem Jd. composed by bishop Bjarni (died A. D. 1222), a native of the Orkneys,—óveitan mik súar, the metre of which requires a half rhyme, a rule followed strictly throughout that poem.

B. Of the compds with ú- or ó-, all but a few words are from un-; these exceptional words appear to be contractions, either, a. from ör-, where we have such double forms as ör-ækr and ó-ækr, N. G. L. i. 379; ör-viti and ó-viti, ör-verðr and ó-verðr, ör-vænn and ó-vænn, ör-hæfi and ú-hæfi, ör-keypis and ó-keypis, ú-dæmi qs. ör-dæmi (?), ó-bóta qs. ör-bóta (?), ó-birgr and ör-birgr; perh. also ú-helgi qs. ör-helgi, ú-heilagr qs. ör-heilagr; cp. also such words as ú-mægin and ör-mæga, ú-synja qs. ör-synja (?). β. from of, esp. before a labial or dental; thus, of-vægr and ó-vægr, of-frynn qs. of-frynn, ó-sköp = of-sköp (?), ó-freskr qs. of-freskr, ó-fyrirsynju qs. of-fyrirsynju (?), ó-hljóð or ú-hljóð qs. of-hljóð (?), ó-drell and ó-drell, of-ljóss and ó-ljóss. In some of these instances doubt may arise, for a double set of compds might have sprung up. On the other hand, the great number of compds with un-, er- in German and Saxon, and the scarcity of such words in the Norse tongue, lead to the conclusion that many of these compds in the course of time have been lost or replaced by ú-; cp. also of-allt and á-valt, (of-saka and á-saka, of-bryði and á-bryði, of-munir and á-munir, af-vöxtr and á-vöxtr, af-burðr and of-burðr?). Since in most Editions the spelling with ú- has been adopted in these classes of words, they must be sought for under that head.

ÓÐAL, n., pl. óðul; in Norse MSS. it is usually contracted before a vowel (whence arose the forms óðli, óðli), and owing to a peculiarity in the Norse sound of ð an r is inserted in contracted forms, órðla, órðlom, N. G. L. passim: [akin to adal, óðli, óðli, = nature; óðlask = adipisci; óðlingr, q. v.; A. S. éðel = patrimony; it is also the parent word of Germ. edel, adel, = noble, nobility, for the nobility of the earliest Teut. communities consisted of the land-owners. From this word also originated mid. Lat. allodium, prob. by inverting the syllables for the sake of euphony (all-od = od-al); óðal or éðel is the vernacular Teut. form, allodium the Latinised form, which is never found in vernacular writers; it may be that the transposition of syllables was due to the th sound in óðal; and hence, again, the word feudal is a compd word, fee-odal, or an odal held as a fee or fief from the king, and answering to heid-launað óðal of the Norse law (heid = fee = king's pay). N. G. L. i. 91.]

B. Nature, inborn quality, property, = adal, óðli, óðli, q. v.; this seems to be the original sense, þat er eigi at réttu mannsins óðal, Sks. 326 B; þat er helst byrjar til farmanns óðals, a seaman's life, 52; þat er kaupmanna óðal (= mercatorum est), 28; jörðum öllum óðal batni, Gh. 21.

II. a law term, an allodium, property held in allodial tenure, patrimony. The condition which in the Norse law constitutes an óðal was either an unbroken succession from father to son (er að hefir áfa leift) through three or more generations, N. G. L. i. 91, 237, Gpl. 284; or unbroken possession for thirty or more years, N. G. L. i. 249; or sixty years, Gpl. 284; or it might be acquired through brand-erfð (q. v.), through weregild, barn-fóstr (q. v.); and lastly heid-launað óðal, an allodial fief, was granted for services rendered to the king, see N. G. L. i. 91: the óðal descended to the son, and was opp. to útjarðir (out-lands), and lausafé (movables), which descended to the daughter, Gpl. 233; yet even a woman, e. g. a baugrygr (q. v.), could hold an óðal, in which case she was called óðals-kona, 92, jörð komin undir snúð ok snældu = an estate come under the rule of the spindle, N. G. L. i. 237; the allit. phrase, arfr ok óðal, 31, Gpl. 250; brígða óðal, N. G. L. i. 86; selja óðal, to sell one's óðal, 237. The óðal was in a certain sense inalienable within a family, so that even when parted with, the possessor still retained a title (land-bríð, máldagi & landi). In the ancient Scandin. communities the inhabited land was possessed by free óðalsmen (allodial holders), and the king was the lord of the people, but not of the soil. At a later time, when the small communities were merged into great kingdoms, through conquest or otherwise, the king laid hold of the land, and all the ancient óðals were to be held as a grant from the king; such an attempt of king Harold Fairhair in Norway and the earls of Orkney in those islands is recorded in Hkr. Har. S. Hárf. ch. 6, Eg. ch. 4, cp. Ld. ch. 2, Orkn. ch. 8, 30, 80 (in Mr. Dasent's Ed.); cp. also Hák. S. Goða ch. 1. Those attempts are recorded in the Icel. Sagas as acts of tyranny and confiscation, and as one of the chief causes for the great emigration from the Scandinavian kingdoms during the 9th century (the question of free land here playing the same part as that of free religion in Great Britain in the 17th century). The attempt failed in Norway, where the old óðal institution remains in the main to the present day. Even the attempts of king Harold were, according to historians (Konrad Maurer), not quite analogous to what took place in England after the Conquest, but appear to have taken something like the form of a land-tax or rent; but as the Sagas represent it, it was an attempt towards turning the free óðal institution into a feudal one, such as had already taken place among the Teutons in Southern Europe.

ÓÐINN, m., dat. Óðni; [A. S. Wodan; O. H. G. Wodan, in the Old High German song Phol ende Wodan vuoron si holza; in the Norse the w is dropped, whence Óðinn]; = Odin, Wodan, the name of the founder of the ancient Northern and Teutonic religion, who was afterwards worshipped as the supreme god, the fountain-head of wisdom, the founder of culture, writing, and poetry, the progenitor of kings, the lord of battle and victory; so that his name and that of Allföðr (Allfather, the father of gods and men) were blended together. For Odin as an historical person see esp. Yngl. S., the first chapters of which were originally written by Ari the historian, who himself traced his pedigree back to Odin. For the various tales of Odin as a deity see the Edda and the old poems; for the legends explaining how Odin came by his wisdom, how he was inspired, how he pawned his eye in the well of Mimir, see Vsp. 22; how he hung in the world-tree Yggdrasil, Hm. 139 sqq.; and the most popular account, how he carried away the poetical mead from the giant Suttung, etc., see Hm. 104–110, and Edda 47–49; for his travelling in disguise in search of wisdom among giants and Norns, Vpm., Gm., Vsp. For Odin's many names and attributes see Edda (Gl.). The greatest families, the Ynglings in Sweden, Skjöldungs in Denmark, and the Háleygir in Norway, traced their pedigrees back to Odin, see the poems Ytt., Ht., Lange-fögtal. In translations from the Latin, Odin was, strangely enough, taken to represent Mercury; thus, kölludu þeir Pál Óðin, en Barnabas þóe, they called Paul Odin, but Barnabas they called Thor, is an ancient rendering of Acts xiv. 12, cp. Clem., Bret., and passim. This seems to have originated with the Romans themselves; for Tacitus says, 'deorum maxime Mercurium colunt,' by which he can only mean Wodan; the Romans may have heard the German tales of Wodan's wonderful travels, his many assumed names and disguises, his changes of shape, his eloquence, his magical power,—tales such as abound in the Edda,—and these might make the Romans think of the Greek legends of Hermes; accordingly, when the planetary week days were adopted from the Lat., 'dies Mercurii' was rendered into A. S. by Wodansdag, in Engl. Wednesday, in Dan. Onsdag, in Norse Óðins-dagr, Orkn. 386, Fms. ix. 282; Óðins-nótt, f. Wednesday night, N. G. L. i. 17. Óðins-hani, a, m. a bird, trínga hyperborea, or the phalaropus cinereus, or the red phalarope, see Fjölnir viii, Faber, Edda (Gl.).

II. Northern local names, Óðins-vé, n. the sanctuary of Odin = Odense in Fünen in Denmark, Knyt. S. Óðins-salr, m. in Norway, Munch's Norg. Beskr. 79; Óðins-lundr, m. Odin's grove. In a single instance Athen is rendered by Óðins-borg, and the Athenians by Óðins-borgar-menn, Post. 645, 90; the name can only have been formed from the Greek name pronounced with the th sound, perhaps by the Northmen at Constantinople, who may have associated the name, thus sounded, with Odin's supposed travels from the east to Sweden, and his halts at various places, which were afterwards called after him, as recorded in Yngl. S. As a pr. name, Othen villicus, Dipl. Arna-Magn. (Thorkelin) i. 23; Oden Thronsdson, D. N. iv. 756, 764; Óðin-dís, f., Baut., but very rare. It is noteworthy that the name of Odin is, in the old poets, hardly ever used as appellative in poet. circumlocutions of a 'man': málm-Óðinn is a sw. key, = warrior.

óð-inndæla, u. f. a sw. key. [qs. of inndæla (?) from of and eindæll or inndæll = strange, odd]: a puzzle (?); ek skal kæra um óðindæla mína sjálfis, I have to complain of my puzzle, an accident that has happened to me, Fms. vi. 374.

The tale in Plato's Protagoras is an interesting illustration of the Northern legend as briefly told (and only there) in Vsp. 17, 18: tryggva öð, hafa góðan öð, to be of good cheer, Nj. Ólaf, m. Olave, an old and favourite pr. name; the oldest form seems to have been Áleifr, from Anleifr, as seen from rhymes, e. g. Áleifr is made to rhyme with reifum, kleif, or the like, Hallfred passim; and, on the other hand, Álaf with stálfa, haifa, Eg. (in a verse), Fms. vi. (in a verse); then the ei was changed into ó, Álafar fríð gáfu, Sigvat; then the initial á into ó, and Ólaf is made to rhyme with sól in a poem of the end of the 11th century; lastly, the medial á into a, Ólafir. This Norse name is rendered by Anlaf in the Saxon Chron., and by Amalbh in the Irish Chroniclers; thus Rígh Amalbh = king Olave the White in Dublin, see pref. p. iv; in local names, Ólafar-dalir, -fjörðr, -vík, Landn.: Ólafar-dalir, m. pl. the men from Olave-dale, Gullþ. ÓR or OR, written with o in older vellums, or now and then even with y, yr; in later MSS. with u, ur, which in mod. Icel. is sounded long, úr. In other Teut. languages this prep. has been lost as an independent word; only the Goth. has us = us, dwo, and the O. H. G. ar, ir, ur, which in mid. H. G. was lost and replaced by the adverb aus, O. H. G. az, answering to Icel. út, Engl. out, a word altogether different from ór, see Grimm's Dict. s. v. er; ur, however, survived as a prefixed particle in a countless number of compds. in A. S. ár, in O. H. G. ar, ir, in mid. H. G. and Germ. er; causal verbs are formed by means of this prefixed particle, e. g. Goth. u-watjan, A. S. u-weccan, Engl. to awaken, O. H. G. ar-wechan, Germ. er-wecken. In the Scand. languages, on the other hand, the independent prep. has been preserved in its fullest extent, whereas the prefixed particle is rare, mostly with adjectives, and is sounded and spelt ör, e. g. ör-endr = exanimis; seldom er, for erlendr (q. v.) is different; ör- or úr- seems to belong only to words of later formation, as ör-laun, ör-skurðr, úr-kast, úr-þvætti, refus; úr-hættis, out of time (from skera ör, kasta úr). These compds. will be given under the head of ör- and úr-. The quantity of the root-vowel in the particle ör, ur is an unsettled question; the German and Saxon forms er-, ar-, as also the Icel. prefixed ör-, seem to indicate a short, the present Icel. pronunciation úr- a long, vowel. The MSS. in these cases give no help; in this Dictionary it has been assumed as long (ör) in deference to the majority of Editions and the present Icel. spelling and pronunciation.

A. Out of, from; as remarked in the introduction to the prep. af, the prep. ór (p. 3, col. 2) denotes from the inside of a thing (out of which), and in most cases corresponds to i, so that the same case which goes with or would also go with i, (and thus it answers to i with dat., see i A. I-III); tekiun ör jörðu, taken out of the earth (answering to i jörðu, of anything lying in the earth), Fms. i. 51; ör skóginn, vi. 225; yr afreitt, Grág. ii. 233; yr héraði, Isl. ii. 321, 333; fara ör landi, to leave the country, Fms. vi. 284; ör þrándheimi, Eg. 32 (opp. to i þrándheimi); ör Tungu, Nj. 95, 192; Ísland bygðisk ör Noregi, from Norway, Jb. 4; austan ör Smálandum, Nj. 192; ör Breiðafirði, Isl. ii. 368; ör

Akin to this is the legend of three wishes granted to one by some good fairy; hence the phrase, eiga sér ósk, to own a wish; eina vildi eg eiga mér óskina svó góða, a ditty, Maurer's Volksagen. II. a pr. name of a woman, dat. P

P (pá), the fifteenth letter, was not figured in the old Runic alphabet, in which the bjarkan (B) was made to serve for both b and p; it is found only in very late Runes, as e.g. the Runic alphabet of the Danish king Waldemar (died A.D. 1241), where it is figured K or as a dotted B (B). Skálda 177, and the Arna-Magn. Runic MS. II. the p is in Icel. sounded as in Engl., pína = pain, hlaupa = leap.

B. REMARKS.—As all words with p initial have been borrowed at different times from foreign languages, the number of them goes on decreasing the farther we go back into antiquity; this is also the case in other Teutonic languages; the vocabulary in Ulf. presents about seven p words,—paida, plapia, plata, plinsjan, punga, prangan, pund, pynd, pyr, pad, peord (while the oldest and best, Beowulf, has none), see Grein. The ancient Icelandic or Norse poems of the heathen age have still fewer than the A.S.; the first words we meet with are penningr, a penny, Bragi; pundari, Egil (see ljód-pundari);—which, with some other words beginning with p, are from the heathen age. Along with the introduction of Christianity many such words came in, chiefly through the English, e.g. prestr, pína, pína, páskar, páfi, pistill, prédika: through trade from the Norman-English, prúðr, prýði, páll, pallr, pell, poki, partr: and lastly, through the English trade with Iceland in the 15th and 16th centuries, prenta, púðr, petti, peisa, etc.; some few words, too, have since been adopted from the mod. Danish. A few words may be traced to Gaelic, and a few have been traced to the Chadic (Finnish); the scantiness of such words, however, shews better than anything else how very small indeed was the influence these languages had on the Norse, all the more so as the Finnish vocabulary abounds with p words. The letter p in an Icelandic Dictionary stands quite apart from all the other letters, for it is made up of a motley collection of words, incoherent and broken, containing no roots, no great verbs, particles, or such words as make the stock of a genuine vocabulary. The absence of initial p in the Teutonic language is not due to any inability to pronounce it, but to causes inherent to the parent language of the Teutonic as well as the classical languages, for in Greek and Latin the letter b, which, according to Grimm's law, answers to the Teutonic p, stands exactly in the same predicament as p in the Teutonic; there is no single instance of 'lautverschiebung' from a Gr.-Lat. b to a Teut. p (Curtius); no word beginning with p is formed by 'ablaut,' and only a few are derived by 'umlaut' (prýði, pyngja, pæla). For other details see the introduction to letters B and F.

PADDA, u. f. [A.S. pada; Dutch padde; Engl. paddock]:—a toad; ormar, edlur, frotskr, ok pöddur, snakes, lizards, frogs, and toads. Fms. x. 380; myss ok ormar, edlur ok pöddur, O. H. 109; ekki eitrvikindi, hvárki ormr né padda, Sk. 88, MS. 623. 26; þar eru eigi höggormar, frotskr né padda, there are neither snakes, frogs, nor toads, viz. in Ireland, referring to the tale of St. Patrick,—a legend taken from a popular etymology of the saint's name, q. 'padd-reaker,' toad-driver. 2. in Icel., where no amphibia are found, used of any insects or beetles in pools or foul water.

PALLR, m. [the etymology of this word, as also the time when and place whence it was borrowed, is uncertain; the true Norse word is bekkr or fet; pallr may be of Norman origin, although it is frequently used in the Sagas referring to the Saga time (10th century); even the benches in the legislative assembly on the alping were called pallar, not bekkir; but this cannot have been so originally. The word itself is, like páll, probably from Lat. palus, pala = stipes, Du Cange; Engl. pale, palings; in the Icel. it is used of big steps (Lat. gradus), esp. of any big floor or dais in old dwellings, sometimes = fet (q. v.) or = lopt (q. v.), and lastly of the benches in the hall = bekkr (q. v.) The adoption of the word was probably connected with the change in the floor and seats of the halls, as mentioned in Fagrsk. ch. 219, 220, which arrangement of benches was adopted from Norman England, and is in fact still seen in English college-halls, with the raised high floor at the upper end. In Icel. the ladies were then seated on this dais (há-pallr, þver-pallr), instead of being placed, according to the older custom, on the left hand along the side walls, see below, II. 2. As the Sagas were written after this had taken place, so the use of the word, e.g. in the Njála (ch. 34 and often), may be an anachronism.]

Þapir, a. m. [Lat. papa; Gr. πάππa; cp. early Swed. þaplinger, whence mod. Swed. þabling and þablings-söe near Copenhagen; Germ. pfaffen]:—a pope, priest; the Irish anchorites were esp. called Papar; traces of such anchorites at the first arrival of the Northmen were found in the east of Icel.; þá voru hér menn Kristnir þeir es Norðmenn kalla Papa, Jb. ch. 1, Landn. (pref.). These 'monks of the west' had sought this remote desert island in order to shun all intercourse with men, and when the heathen Northmen came to Iceland, the Papas left it; the statement of Ari Fróði in the Landnám is confirmed by the book of the Irish monk Dicuil (De Mensurâ Orbis), Ed. Paris, 1807. prim-signa, d and ad. [Lat., an eccl. word], to give the 'prima signatio' or 'signaculum crucis', a religious act, preliminary to christening; persons thus signed with the cross were catechumens, and if adults they could join in the social life among Christians; they were also admitted to a special part of the mass (primsignndra messa = the mass for the 'prime-signed'), whereas all intercourse with heathens was forbidden. An infant who died, having received the prima signatio, but not baptism, was to be buried in the outskirts of the churchyard, where the consecrated and unconsecrated earth meet, and without burial service,—ef barn andask primsignat, ok hefir eigi verit skírt (primsignat ok hefir eigi meiri skírn, Sb. l. c.) ok skal þat grafa við kirkju-garð út, þar er mættisk vígð mold ok úvígð, ok syngva eigi leigsöng yfir, K. þ. K. (Kb.) 7. A monster-shapen infant was to receive the prima signatio, but not baptism, and then to be left to die (exposed) at the church door—þat barn (a monster-child) skal ok til kirkju bera, láta primsigna, leggja fyrir kirkju-dyr, geti inn nánasti niðr til þess er önd er ór, N. G. L. i. 339; í þessi efan primsigni prestr ok skírl, íll. 351; hann primsignaði hann fyrst ok skírdi hann síðan eptir síðvenju, Barl. 147. The words in the English Prayer Book—'and do sign him (her) with the sign of the cross'—are remains of the 'signaculum crucis' of the ancient church. During the heathen age the Scandinavian merchants and warriors who served among Christians abroad in England or Germany used to take the prima signatio, for it enabled them to live both among Christians and heathens without receiving baptism and forsaking their old faith; ek em primsignuðr at eins en eigi skírdur, I am 'prime-signed,' but not baptized, Fms. ii. 240, Valla L. 205, Kristni S. ch. 1, 2, Fb. i. 346, 357, ii. 137, 243; England var Kristið ok hafði lengi verit þá er þetta var tilðenda, Aðalsteinn konungr var vel Kristinn... hann bað þórolf ok þá bræðr at þeir skyldi láta primsignask, þrját þat var þá mikill siðr, bæði með kaupmönnum ok þeim er á málá gengu með Kristnum mönnum, þrját þeir menn, er primsignuðir vóru, höfðu allt samneyti við Kristna menn ok svá heidna, en höfðu þat at átrúnaði er þeim var skipfeldast, Eg. 265, Gisl. 96; see also Vita Anscarii, ch. 24. These 'prime-signed' men, returning to their native land, brought with them the first notions of Christianity into the heathen Northern countries, having lived among Christians, and seen their daily life and worship, and they undoubtedly paved the way for the final acceptance of the Christian faith among their countrymen. It may even be that some strange heathen rites of the last days of paganism, such as the bjannak (q. v.), the sprinkling of infants with water, were due to this cause.

Q (kú), the sixteenth letter, was in old vellums chiefly or only used in the digraph qu, perhaps under the influence of the Latin; it was afterwards disused in MSS. of the 15th century, but was reintroduced in printing (even Björn Halldórsson's Dict. has a special Qu), until of late it has been discarded, and k is used throughout. All words beginning with Q are therefore to be sought for under k.

R

R (err), the seventeenth letter, had in the old Runes two forms: one as initial and medial (radical), R; the other as final (inflexive), Y or h. Of the last two, Y is used in the old Runes (stone in Tune, the Golden horn) in the words gastir, holingar, wiwar, as these inscriptions have now finally been read and settled by Prof. Bugge of Christiania; h is used in the common Runes; and its name was reð,—reid kveða rossum versta, in the Runic poem.

B. PRONUNCIATION, SPELLING.—The pronunciation is as in Italian or in mod. Gr. (rb), and this still survives in Norway and Sweden, whereas the Danes have adopted a guttural r, which an Icelandic throat is unable to produce. In ancient times radical and inflexive r were perhaps different in sound, as may be inferred from the spelling on the old Runic monumen s, as well as from comparison; for the inflexive r was in the Gothic a sibilant (s), so that the Runic Y and h may well have represented a sound intermediate between r and s.

II. the inflexive r is assimilated in words such as heill; steinn, lauss; dropped in nagl, fors, son, vin, see the Gramm.:—the ancient writers have a double r in nouns and adverbs, such as starr, stórr, ferr, sidarr, optarr, meirr; even against etymology, as in hárr (bigb), márr (a mew). In mod. usage a final rr is never sounded. Again, in gen. and dat. fem. and gen. plur. and in compar., in words such as þeirri, þeirrar, þeirra, færr, fárra, the mod. sound and spelling is rr, where the ancients seem to have sounded one r only, þeiri, þeirar, þeira, færi, færa, which pronunciation is said to be retained in eastern Icel.; the Editions, however, have mostly adopted rr. The spelling of the vellums is often dubious, as in them a double r is written either dotted (ṛ) or with a small capital r, but mostly without a fixed rule:—Norse vellums often give rs for ss (mersa = messi, þessi = þessi, e. g. in the Hauksbók).

C. CHANGES.—As the Icel. cannot sound w before r, a set of words which in Engl. and even mod. Dan. and Swed. begin with w, in Icel. belong to r; thus, rangr, röng, rata, reini, reitr, reista, reka, ríða, rita, reidr, rindill, risi, rist, súskr, rög, rugl, rólta, qs, wrangr, ... wrólta. In a few words the r has been dropped after a labial, thus Icel. víxl = A. S. wíxl, Icel. beisl = A. S. bridels, Lat. frenum, Icel. bauta-steinn qs, brautar-steinn; Icel. vá qs, vrá, Hm 25, Skv. 3, 29; or a false r is inserted, as in the Icel. ábristir = Engl. beesings, Goth. beist, Germ. beist-milch; bræla and bæla, bál; analogous are Engl. pin and prin, spænk and A. S. spræcan, Germ. sprechen, Icel. freta, Lat. pedo:—in a few Norse vellums ðr for ð is used before s, l, n, öðrla = öðla = öðala, öðrask = öðlask, Guðrs = Guðs, heiðrnir = heiðnir, liðrsemd = liðsemd, söðrla = söðla, ráðrleitni = ráðleitni, e. g. the O. H. L. (see the pref. to Prof. Unger's Ed. p. ix), owing to an inability of sounding ðl, ðs. Again, metathesis has taken place in ragr, ras, = argr, ars.

66 All words having a radical initial b (br) are to be sought for under b; see the introduction to that letter.
